The funeral of the late Owen McAvoy, Sidetrip, took place from his late residence, Seward Street, to St. James Church on Monday morning, March 30th, where a Solemn Mass of Requiem was sung by the Rev. R. J. Pichett of the parish. Rev. D. A. Cahrigan of St. Mary's Cathedral, Kingston, assisted Rev. Father Farrell with the ceremonies at the cemetery. The late Mr. McAvoy was born in the township of Thurlow and was the last of a family of seven. His father, Mr. Elizabeth predeceased him about ten years ago, and his mother, who was 93 years of age and one of the pioneer Catholics. For more than ten years since he retired from active farming he had spent his time between his home and the church and the home of the parish priest whom he loved to serve in his own humble way. His passing will cause a wide gap in the parish which will be hard to fill. He was a member of the Holy Name Society. His funeral which was largely attended by scores friends regardless of creed attested the high esteem in which he was held. He is survived by his wife, two sons, four daughters and three sisters. The daughters are Mrs. Leo Jordan and Mrs. Leo McCauley of Frankford; Mary of Toronto and Mrs. Neil at home. The sons are Harold of Toronto; Patrick of Saskatoon and Thomas at home.

The spiritual offerings were:

DESIRE BATSTONE TO COACH QUEEN'S

KINGSTON, April 10—That Harry Batstone will be reappointed coach of Queen's senior football team is the report at the university. The Athletic Board of Control will meet in a few days to make the appointment.

The players went on record as being delighted with his work and state that his ability was responsible for the winning of the championship.

New Tariffs and Their Effect on Maritime Areas

Halifax, N. S., April 10 — By the Canadian Press—Wide exporters from Nova Scotia to the United States, particularly of fish, are at present inclined to attribute difficulties encountered in the sale of their industry of the tariff measure as approved by the United States Senate. It appears that except in the case of canning companies on the Bay of Fundy shore and large growers of potatoes the province will be little affected by the proposed rates.

Except for potatoes, agriculture will not suffer appreciably under the bill. The duties on fresh blueberries and strawberries, which comprise an important export business, remain unchanged, and the increase of eight cents a hundred weight on turnips, it is believed will not shut the product out.

Halifax exporters of salt fish and frozen fillets will not be adversely affected, in the present view. Fillet wrapped in waxed paper have been entering United States ports from Nova Scotia under the 2½ per cent duty imposed on fish packed in airtight containers of less than fifteen pounds. Even should the effort fail to have these packs brought under the clear setting a duty of 2½ per cent on fresh fish and frozen fillets—a more favorable rate—the competition apparently will be no worse off than before. Everywhere, however, there is reluctance to adopt an attitude of either pessimism or optimism until the measure has been thoroughly ironed out and its various clauses confirmed in the tariff course.

Particularly is this true in the case of the Scotia Shore firms dealing mainly in shore caught fish and the landings of line fishermen. The opinion that no one would know "what was what" until the measure had been in force six months was advanced by the head of one firm.

Meanwhile, the Central Canadian market for Nova Scotia's fish is growing at the rate of from five to ten per cent. a year.

The main matters, however, are definite in their opinion that the thirty per cent. duty imposed on a product hitherto on the free list will seriously affect their trade. Upwards of 2,000 cases of canned clams are exported annually to the United States from the Bay of Fundy shore.

An increase of from 50 to 75 cents a hundred weight on potatoes is the most serious feature of the bill for the Nova Scotia farmer, and that increase, some persons which formerly shipped largely to the United States will be forced to seek the placing of surplus stock in Nova Scotia's markets at home and abroad. Nova Scotia's largest export market for potatoes is Cuba.

Cabbage exports will also be cut off by the duty of two cents a pound and other products marketed during few cabbage in the United States. Perhaps the brightest phase of the proposed measure from the Nova Scotian agriculturist's point of view is the duty on blue berries, which remains at five cents and one cent per lb. a pound on fresh berries and is increased to thirty-five per cent. ad valorem on frozen. The increase in cream carriers will not affect Nova Scotia.

The unchanged duty of one and a quarter cents a pound on strawberries will have open a market which last year netted Nova Scotia about $20,000.

The province also ships to the United States small amounts of lamb and poultry. Neither trade will be greatly affected by increases of from four to seven cents a pound on lamb and six to eight cents on poultry.

An increase of one hundred per cent will cut out the exportation of dairy cattle. This, however, is not regarded as an unmitigated misfortune as many herdsmen have questioned the wisdom of shipping the best of the province's herds but of the country.

"By and large," I should say we are not greatly hurt," were the words in which one agricultural authority appraised his reaction to the Hawley-Smoot measure.

Crime Is Only Seven Days Wonder

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph. D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

A criminal has recently been apprehended who admits without further ado that he has poisoned, more or less for the fun of it, as it were, several individuals against whom he bore no malice whatsoever.

And I wonder how many people ever think nowadays about the famous Frank case?

Atthe time, when two educated young men deliberately and in cold blood, murdered an inoffensive and helpless child the whole country was astir over it.

If the present rate of increase continues, the time may come when it will be cheaper and more feasible for society to turn out all those held in prisons, reformatories and asylums and let the normal members of the country take their places.

It is no joking matter, however—this alarming and progressive increase of insanities!

Every now and again the nation is stirred by the report of some one new affair.

Before long another momentous event will occupy another unusual crime —gripe the popular attention.

The first is overshadowed and promptly forgotten!

The body politic reacts in much the same way as a single individual. All of us tend to live too much in the present, failing to profit by the experiences of the past!

Our attitude of merely attending with hectic emotionalism to startling abnormal behavior only when it occurs will some day read like a boomerang that has already to some degree—set to our undoing.

Medical men are rapidly developing a new principle in the treatment of disease.

They no longer are they content to wait until disease knocks at the door before attacking it.

They deliberately take precautions that it never shall appear.

The presence, at times, of persons in any community of distinctly abnormal individuals is a constant potential menace to our peace, prosperity, property and lives.

Most of the pronounced insane cases are known and are being supervised—at least in a reverse.

Not so with the other types of mental aberration!

Much, if not most of the feebleminedness among us—also habitual criminality and perverted sex conditions—is running loose and often wild.

We are not doing as much as we should to protect ourselves against a common danger!

How can we?

By each and everyone of us taking a personal interest in the problem of abnormality; by acquainting ourselves with the facts; by bringing pressure to bear upon the powers that be in establishing more mental hygiene clinics; by prevailing upon the court to temper their justice with science as well as mercy.

AUTO RUNS 59 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS

Automobile engineers who worked 'off years in an effort to reduce gasoline consumption have found the solution in a marvelous invention that tells all cars. An actual test made by one of the engineers showed 59 miles on a gallon of gas. Thousands of car owners have already installed this new invention. They not only report amazing gas savings but are also surprised to find quicker pick-up, instant starting, smoother running motors and disappearance of carbon. SUN ECLIPSE ON APRIL 28

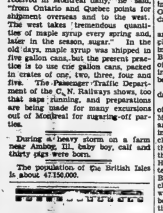
Will be Visible in Canada; So Will Eclipse of Moon

NEW YORK, April 11.— Two eclipses, one of the moon and one of the sun, will be visible in Canada during this month. The first, an eclipse of the moon, will occur at 12.20 on the morning of April 13 and will last for one hour and 15 minutes. The eclipse of the sun, which will be only partial as far as Canada is concerned, will occur on April 28. It will cross the border between Montana and Saskatchewan at about 12.30 p. m.

To the astronomer the eclipse of the sun will be the more interesting of the two and, to those stationed at points within the path of totality, it will be the more spectacular. The black spot of the moon's shadow will touch the earth first in the Pacific Ocean about 270 miles southwest of San Francisco. For a thousand miles it will rush across the states of California and Idaho, ending on the border between the latter and Montana. The partial eclipse will be visible in the southeastern corner of Saskatchewan, across central Manitoba and northern Ontario. It will then be seen along a line which divides Hudson Bay from James Bay and later across a wide section of northern Quebec, the part which used to be known as Ungava, before it finally passes out over the Atlantic later being visible for a short time in Central Labrador.

Totality will occur where the tip of the shadow of the moon, as it comes between the sun and the earth just touches the globe and then lifts so that light from the sun streams around it. It will then become annular, that is the moon will appear as a smaller black disc passing across the face of the sun which will form a great ring of light about it. In the path of totality the shadow will rush eastward as a rate of 1,000 miles an hour, so that total darkness will occur for only about a second and a half.



Observatories the world over will send out photographic expeditions to "shoot" the eclipse during the brief totality. They will time their cameras shutters by a special formula worked out for the event, which will be one of the shortest of its kind on record. Some cameras will be set up in aeroplanes flying at varying heights up to 10,000 feet.' Altogether astronomers look forward to doing one of the quickest jobs of their lives.

MAPLE SYRUP SEASON NOW AT ITS HEIGHT

MONTREAL, April 11 — "Sap" running. Frosty nights and sunny days are doing their work and the maple syrup season is at its height, according to O. E. Bellerose, assistant General Manager C. N. Express. "Heavy shipments of syrup are being received in Montreal daily," he said, "from Ontario and Quebec, points of shipment overseas and to the west. The west takes tremendous quantities of maple syrup every spring and, later in the season, sugar." In the old days, maple syrup was shipped in five gallon cans, but the present practice is to use one gallon cans, packed in crates of one, two, three, four and five. The Passenger Traffic Department of the C. N. Railways shows, too, that sap is running, and preparations are being made for many excursions out of Montreal for sugaring-off parties.

Canada Creosote Established as Leading Branch

David Terry a Popular and Energetic Supt.

Trenton, Ont., April 11. (Special by Staff Reporter)—Seventeen years ago the Canada Creosoting Company first started operations in Trenton, and today the industry has grown to be one of the biggest and best in the town, employing 100 men and operating 5 plants at different strategic points all over Canada, and the treating of wood products chemically so that they will better withstand the weather has become one of the necessities for many industries.

All kinds of woods are treated with the boiling creosote, for a variety of purposes. These include the treating of railway ties, telegraph poles, piling paving blocks, lumber for bridges and fence posts. The Canada Creosote plant at Trenton covers eight acres of ground, employed at the present time with over one hundred and twenty-five men, and has a yearly payroll of over $150,000. This means a great deal to Trenton as a whole.

David Terry is the present superintendent, he having been born in Barcovan Beach, the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Terry. He is well known and liked by the citizens, takes an active part in sports and is popular both with the citizens and his own employees. He started in with the Creosote Company at Trenton in 1917, and has worked his way up to superintendent through sheer ability.

To the Quinte Sun we are indebted for the following facts with reference to promotions received by Trenton boys who have "made good" with the Canada Creosote Company.

Chas. "Bones" Reynolds, who pitched great ball in his boyhood for Trenton, has proven his worth as a "treating ties" and is now superintendent of the Canada Creosoting plant at Truro, Nova Scotia.

Irving Ward, son of Dr. J. P. and Mrs. Ward, gained promotion from Trenton and is now plant superintendent at Sudbury, Ontario.

Leonard Booth, who was at the local plant for several years, is now superintendent at Edmonton, Alta.

Mr. J. C. O'Connell, who was superintendent here and who married Miss Pelletier, a Trenton young lady, is now at Montreal and holds the important post of superintendent of operation.

Clifford Robertson, son of the late Robert Robertson, was promoted to the head office staff at Montreal because of his ability.

BAD BREATH IS — TO BE AVOIDED

Altogether Undesirable Healthy Mouth and Throat Kills Halitosis

A bad breath is altogether undesirable and, for that reason, considerations should be given by everyone to the causes of the condition in order to avoid its occurrence.

The fermentation of food particles in the mouth will almost certainly cause a bad breath. This commonly occurs when food is held in a decaying tooth cavity. Proper care of the teeth, by brushing them regularly after meals and—most important time of all—at bedtime, in order to get rid of food particles, and by the securing of regular dental care will prevent bad breath from a source that is now common.

When there is actual disease of the mouth, such as pyorrhoea, or of the adjoining parts, bad breath may result either from the condition itself or from the fermentation of food particles which the condition favours. A healthy throat and a mouth kept clean by regular use of the tooth brush are the first considerations in preserving an inoffensive breath.

In addition to the local conditions, which act as a cause of bad breath, there are general conditions which bring it about. We think, first, of the digestive tract because in our minds a bad taste in the mouth is frequently associated with digestive upsets. Bad breath does occur quite often among those who overeat, or whose elimination is faulty. The bad breath, in such cases, is really a symptom of an abnormal condition of the digestive tract and is regarded as such digestive tract and is regarded as such by the individual's physician.

Under such conditions, the remedy lies in altering the mode of living. A proper diet, avoidance of over-eating or of over-indulgence in one or more articles of diet, regular examination, increased intake of water and exercise are the points which should first be dealt with.

The correction of any unpleasant odour should always be thought of along the lines of the removal of the cause. It is much preferable to overcome body odours by regular bathing by attempting to overpower them by using perfumes. In the same way, the logical manner of dealing with bad breath is to remove its cause.

The treatment of symptoms is necessary, but their cure and the prevention of their recurrence depend upon the treatment of the cause, the root of the condition. It never pays to temporize; it is always satisfactory to get to grips with the cause.

EXCAVATING FOR OLD TIME FLAPPERS

ST. ALBANS, England, April 11 — The life of aristocratic flappers of about the year one, A.D., is likely to come to light in excavation of Verulam, richest of ancient Briton's cities, Verulam was one of the most trivial capitals of prehistoric England.

When the Roman came, it is believed by archaeologists, they made Verulam the only municipality in the province, a distinction which they themself never seem to have attained. For their town, it is regarded as the most likely prospecting spot in the country. It does not match the Royal Cemeteries of other Imperial Roman ports is probably filled with buildings many of them dwellings of various states.

Roman relics already found in other ancient cities have fired the imaginations of archaeologists. On the site of the new bank of England, not far from Verulam, was found a feminine eyebrow and lip-stick set more ornamental than those of 1930 fashions. It was a slender metal painting instrument with a small, beautifully fashioned bottle from which the colors were dipped.

To state its ancient rank under Roman rule Verulam is believed to have conformed with the highest standards of provincial life of the time. Dr. Whelser of the London Museum says the excavation should provide much new material for elucidation of the early history of London, which was done by.

Miller's Worm Powders not only make the infantile system untenable for worms, but by their action on the bowels, stomach and bowels they correct such troubles as lack of appetite, bilious attacks and other internal disorders that the worms create. Children thrive upon them and no matter what condition their worm-infested stomachs may be in, they will show improvement as soon as the treatment begins.

Lorain, Ohio, advertised for bids on municipal improvements totaling $100,000.

CLEAR WATER

Citizens of Belleville may rest assured that when they are able to drink water from the new filter, they will be consuming the clearest water which it is possible to have through the modern method of filtering.

Belleville has had little or nothing in the way of epidemic of recent years and yet there have been occasions when there was a great hue and cry as to the water supply. In about a year's time there will be no occasion to think or talk in that strain.

The city has had the advantage of the best engineering advice in the planning of the filter. The same experts, the firm of Gore, Nasmith and Storrie, will supervise the construction.

The latest modern scientific devices and thought are to be utilized in the construction of the plant.

MUSIC DEPARTMENT IN SCHOOLS

Empire Day music which has delighted citizens in the past few years is to be offered again on two evenings this year under the direction of the supervisor of music for the schools of the city. Mr. Hunt has in preparation the program which will attract as have those entertainments of other years.

Music rightly plays a large part in the world today. It with the other arts is to play an increasing part as this country grows in wealth and nationhood.

The Board of Education has been more than justified in what has been accomplished by the establishment of a department of music in the schools.

FINE STRUCTURES

Two fine new structures are to be added this year to the imposing array of churches, new schools, and public buildings. These are the water purification plant at the west end of the city and the lower bridge spanning the Moira River.

Some decades ago there was little building. Many buildings had been built then and were about filling the need. The nineties and the first few years of the twentieth century were not marked for their building operations here.

Since 1910 there has been a great amount of building locally and last year saw a great deal of work of this nature ending in the new arena.

The two to be added in 1930 are not to be despised, the new bridge is one of the most needed while no one dares to say a filter is not required.

Steadily Belleville is bringing its plants up to date and is making these wherever possible as attractive as possible.

SPEAKING OF CALIGULA

The gallows which the ancient Roman Emperor Caligula used have been brought to the surface after almost twenty centuries. He is thought to have been mad for his life was one long debauch and series of cruelties. He at last proclaimed himself as a god and the people at last assassinated him.

His gallows have especial interest to the modern world which has few enough remains of ancient Roman civilization. These vessels may lead to the collection of more accurate data about ancient manners of living.

"DAMASKING"

"Custom has its authority even with kings. When King George damasked with a hammer the Great Seal of England, so that it might never be used again, he was but following precedent," says the New York Times. "This act of destruction was no doubt once a necessity, done to prevent unauthorized use of the seal. It has become a symbol in recognition of a change in the structure of the empire. In this instance the old order has passed with the coming of the Free State of Ireland. The royal ceremony is the dramatization of a step in the evolution of an ever-changing political entity. Some workman might have battered the seal by the heavier blow of his sledge. A machine might have crushed it or the fire melted it. But the ceremonial stroke by the King, striking but a "dent," suggests the changing but advancing continuity of a Commonwealth of Nations.

"From Damascus came the damask rose, neither red nor white but a "mixed color" between the two; damask water distilled from all sorts of odoriferous bushes wherewith kings were sprinkled; the damask silk or other fabric richly figured, and the damask steel with waved or wavy pattern on its surface. From this, no doubt, the making of the pattern of the sovereign's hammer on the seal was, by similitude, its "damasking."

"Through many lands the word has wandered by caravans of commerce, crusaders and scholars. Adventurous age have poets put it to describing the face of woman. It has furnished blades for chivalry. In the hands of bishops and chancellors it has censored seditious or blasphemous books. And now in the age when democracy prevails throughout the earth it would seem a "hammering the anvil" to keep the custom. But it is a sovereign's act which, without effacing the past, gives promise, in the legend of the new seal that is to replace the old, of a happier relationship than the old could hold for the future."

SIDELIGHTS

BY SUN, BY STARS

By sunlight who can choose but be
As practical as all we see,
As commonplace as busy streets
Where the swift pulse of commerce beats?
Beneath the noonday's golden glare
How can one fail to be aware
Of the appeal of worldly things,
Which to each sense its message brings?

But, ah! by starlight who can fail
To note this lifting of the veil
That lets the flesh peer out at last
Upon a universe more vast
Then day reveals, a fair domain
Without a flaw, without a stain?
By starlight who can fail to learn
The truths for which all souls must yearn?

TORONTO ALDERMEN went through a hot election on New Year's Day to win their seats and the three hundred dollars attached thereto and no doubt expended considerable time, energy and some money. Now they have evened things up by quietly raising their own salaries from $300 per year to $1,200. Controllers who have been receiving $5,000 per year also received a liberal increase but the Mayor's $10,000 was raised to $11,500. And so a good time was had by all.

BELLEVILLE ALDERMEN who think that their public services deserve more than the plaudits of the community should be heartened at the action of Toronto Aldermen in giving their salaries a boost what was a boost, from $300 to $1,200, ah wa wa wa, as Amos would say.

One colored woman was talking to another of the same race recently, about "Green Pastures." Why, said the one who had seen the play, "it is all about Heaben, de Angels am colored folks and Gawd am colored, and eben de Lord am a colored man." "Is da so," said the other, "de whole world must be going Amos and Andy."

An epitaph has given many a hen-pecked husband the opportunity of having the last word, and some of them have made the most of it. No conventional respect for the dead stopped the lady who had this epitaph carved on his wife's tomb:

"My wife is dead, and here she lies,
No man knows she and no man cries,
Where's gone, or how she fares.
Nobody knows, and nobody cares."

ELECTION DURING SUMMER HINTED AT BY PREMIER

Budget Likely to Provide Issue of Contest Liberals Feel

DISSOLUTION IN MAY ?

Most Conservative M.P.'s Will Seek Re-election Despatch Says

OTTAWA, April 11 — At the Liberal caucus Thursday Premier King while not making a definite announcement intimated to his supporters there would be an election this Summer and that it would be on the budget. That is taken to indicate dissolution late in May or early in June.

With the passage of two, it is quite probable all the present Conservative members will be candidates again in their several constituencies for the party nomination. General J. A. Clark, Barrard, B.C., announced some months ago that he had taken on new business responsibilities and would not again accept the Conservative nomination in his constituency. It is also understood that H. G. Hocken, Toronto West Centre, will not be a candidate at the approaching elections. While there are two others who have expressed a desire to return yet it is quite possible they will again be in the field.

Hon. E. N. Rhodes, who last autumn announced his retirement after nearly 20 years of political life, when it is believed, again be a candidate in Vancouver Centre. Mr. Stevens is an invaluable member of parliament, owing to his knowledge, experience, industry and ability, and in the event of a Conservative administration would be assured of an important portfolio. Hon. R. B. Bennett is in his native city to Vancouver made a statement to this effect. With an expanding business Mr. Stevens is making a great sacrifice in spending nearly six months every year in Ottawa but his colleagues are confident he will reconsider his announcement and will be found in the field. Mr. Bennett's cabinet.

The Senate has adjourned until May 13 or two weeks from the time the Commons reassembles after the Easter recess. There has been but little legislation from the Commons for the Senate to consider. It is expected there will be Senate divorce bills placed on the Commons order paper, which will furnish sufficient legislation for a blockade in the Commons, if there is any further attempt to delay or defeat the Ontario divorce courts bill. Hon. Raoul Dandurand, Government leader in the Senate, leaves next week for Geneva and won't return until the end of May.

Clay McCarroll of Knoxville, chairman of the student body in giving the flag to the president's secretary, said: "this flag is a symbol of hatred and freedom and we don't want it to hoist over the campus of a university where these qualities have ceased to exist."

PASSOVER WILL BE CELEBRATED

Belleville Hebrews Will Open Seven Day Feast On Saturday

At sunset on Saturday the Hebrew people begin the celebration of the Passover, the commemoration of the freeing of the children of Israel from the yoke of slavery under which they had thousands of years ago. The Bible prescribes seven days for the observance of the holiday and commands the eating of unleavened bread —Matzoth — throughout the seven days.

Like most of the Jewish holidays, Passover has its symbolic background, but with the flight of generations this has almost entirely disappeared and the feast now stands for the liberation of Israel as depicted in the Book of Exodus. When the Jews, enslaved by the mighty Pharaohs and suffering great hardships, turned to Moses for leadership the great prophet led them out of Egypt through a parched desert where they wandered for many years, and finally brought them to the threshold of Palestine. It was while in the desert that the Jews ate unleavened bread —Matzoth.

LITTLE BENNY'S NOTE BOOK

This morning we was eating brekfist, and ma sed to pop, Willyum, do you realize how old is the anniversity of your grandch'ldn birth? Just one month and today, next time fleet, ones for babies, it seems. Well, what shall we do to celebrate? she sed.

Ive got it, just come to me like a flash, pop sed. We'll have liver and onions for supper, he sed.

Liver and onions being pops favorite thing, and I sed, then we'll have a grate idner, lets celebrate by everybody having their favorite thing. Ill take ice creem and cake for dizzert, I sed.

Ill take liver and onions, pop sez, as usual, ma sed. I never herd of such awful people, the ideer. My suggestion was that we all have our favorite dinner and all drop around and present it to him, and make little speaches and all that sort of thing, she sed.

I cant see ever why you always nag sed. The baby wouldent understand a word of it, and besides and whatnot, we'll have the bad taist to start crying rite in the mist of them. I sed what's the use of celebrating is for everybody to have as good a time as possible. Just take the derivation of the word celebrate, it comes from the 2 Latin werds, Celly to injoy, and Brate, meening yourself, or in other werds, enjoy yourself. Now how can I injoy myself any more than by eating liver and onions? Anser, I cant. Case and I am sure, and how can I injoy myself any more than by having ice cream and cake for dinner? And O wich pop, if we all go to the movies afterwards, thats how ma injoys herself to most, I sed.

Well, come to think of it, there's a new Harold Darling picture at the Majestic, ma sed. Its not her first yawning picture but its her first singing picture and Im dying to see it, she sed, and of course I like to hear the baby some little trinket just the same, she sed. Come to think of it, its not such a bad idea, liver and onions, and ice creem and cake for dizzert, and the Lovey Darling picture later, and when the baby gets little older we can tell him what a fine time we had on the anniversity of its first months birthday, she sed.

Being what happened.

LEOPOLD TRIES UPLIFT METHODS

CHICAGO, April 11 — Nathan Leopold, convicted with Richard Loeb of the "thrill" murder of Bobby Franks, is now an assistant to the chaplain of the Stateville Penitentiary, Father Eugene Weir. His duties, it was said, incluce the arrangement of Sunday service programs designed to uplift the fellow prisoners, adding in themes and compositions for sermons, and service after a library.

Leopold is one of the prison aristocrats, being on the special detail, through his superior education and intellect. The "specials," as they are known, enjoy extra privileges and better food than the other inmates.

TWAIN RELICS FOUND AT LAST

Early Journalistic Efforts of Famous Humorist are Uncovered

Hannibal, Mo., April 11—Long sought newspaper files containing original first works of Mark Twain, famous humorist, and described by him in his autobiography as representing "my first literary venture," have at last been discovered in Hannibal, his native home. They reveal the boy Sam Clemens (Mark Twain) in his teens as substituting as editor of his brother's newspaper here and striving to "liven up" the columns of the paper with his wit. His methods reveal him as even then richly possessed of the ingenuity he later instilled in his famed fiction characters, Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn.

The newspapers were found by the Rev. C. E. Armstrong, Hannibal pastor and long a student of Mark Twain. Dr. Armstrong's discoveries, including the original poem, several witty cartoons by the famous humorist, are described by him in articles published in the Hannibal Courier-Post.

His finest copies of the old "Hannibal Journal," published by Orion Clemens, elder brother of Mark Twain, in 1851, 1853 and 1853. Mark Twain worked on the Journal from 1851 to 1853. His poems (sufficiently called "Mr. Rhymer.....") his catchy way of using the title he explained to mean "To Mary in Hannibal" was discovered in an issue of the Journal of May 6, 1852. The poem is not entitled "To Mary Estie of H.....t, it is signed "Rambler," now revealed as the earliest nom de plume used by the humorist.

In ensuing issues is a witty correspondence between "Rambler-Grumbler," obviously written by Mark Twain in his efforts to "liven up" the paper. The original poem was in an issue of the Journal May 12, 1853. It is entitled "The Heart's Lament," and is addressed "To Bedie W.....e, of Tremont." The poem is signed "Rambler." The original word used by Hannibal Courier-Post who resolved to commit suicide but didn't, and about "a dog-derived cilment," both referred to by Mark Twain in his autobiography, also were found in the old newspaper files.

The return of Orio to discover that his younger brother had been making the paper "snappy" is indicated in an editorial by the editor May 13, 1853, saying that "Rambler" and his cronies must stop their stuff." This editorial edit seems to have ended Mark Twain's fifth and "most probably" last his very first literary and journalistic efforts.

Old Order Changeth; Youth Takes Charge

MISS FAIRFAX HAILS THE NEW GENERATION

Are you seventeen?.....or perhaps nineteen?—or even twenty-one or twenty-two?

Then you are a member of a thrilling new race of beings, who are beginning to be known as the Youngest Generation.

We don't know much about you yet. It must be admitted that your publicity agents are anything but active. But I will confess that we are just a little bit in awe of you. And I will tell you why.

You see, for years we have been hearing so much about the so-called Younger Generation that we seem to have forgotten that young people don't stand still, any more than their elders do. The boys and girls who made up that Younger Generation seemed for a while the youngest people who ever lived. Then their youth was so thoroughly vertised and because they were so successful in getting everything that they felt belonged to Youth. They capitalized it, just as I have done, because they felt, poor creatures, that they were of tremendous importance and it was very alone who could teach their elders and conservative elders how life really should be lived.

But after year went by and still these very young, young people continued to enjoy the "kick" of being slandered and admired, envied and reviled. For naturally, many older people didn't accept their without protest.

But it couldn't last, though that is what some of us didn't realize, because it stopped hearing their shrill voices. What had become of them? Why, they were marrying, of course, like all the rest of the world, and settling down and slipping out of sight.

And their place is being taken by a new race of youngsters, which is you—and which is the Youngest Generation of all.

You took your place far more quietly than your predecessors did. Perhaps you meant to. For they tell us that you have to be quiet.

After all, that generation that succeeded in getting itself so universally talked about—by a party by virtue of being courageous and straightforward, but also partly on the basis of the hip-flask and the petting party.

And from these last indulgences we hear that your generation has cut loose. They tell us that your dislike of strong drink and of intoxication, is nothing short of fanatical—and that your manner at parties is as free from reproach as if you were the youth of the nineties. You are bored and disgusted when anything is carried too far, whether it's drink or making love or spending money or making up time's lost hours. Excesses they say, seem stupid to you.

Already, you dear and wise young creatures, you seem to be the world. But we've heard still more about you. They say tell you want to be intelligent. That many of the things that were done by young people five years ago, you don't want to do, and that you want to do your best to be worthy of life.

Also that you make a great point of health, of "fitness," as the English say. That you like sports all the world, and you want to have strong children. And you are taking care of your bodies in every way, with these ends in view.

You also, no doubt, are pretty sure you know better than your elders. But you are not interested in "shocking" them, or in making yourselves conspicuous. You, too, I gather, think that you know very well how to live your life without any help from us. And on the whole it may be that you're right.

Youngest of the Generations we salute and welcome you!

YEOMAN'S CONDITION IS VERY SERIOUS

(Canadian Press)

OWEN SOUND, Ont., April 11—The condition of Earl Yeoman, the Southampton man, who is in the General and Marine hospital here, as a result of being struck on the back of the head Thursday, remains unchanged. He is still unconscious and grave fears are entertained for his recovery. Harry Longe, brother of Mrs. Edward Longe, who is under arrest at Toronto and held as a material witness, was taken to the county jail at Walkerton early today, and will appear in the police court there this morning, but will be remanded without bail. The woman will be brought back to Walkerton.

3 CANADIANS HELD BY BORDER PATROL

(Canadian Press)

BUFFALO, N.Y., April 11.—John Donovan, Port Erie, Ontario, indicted for conspiracy to smuggle hundreds of liquor into this country from Canada and sought for nearly a year, was in the hands of Federal authorities here today. He and two other Canadians were arrested late last night by customs border patrolmen on Grand Island. The identity of the other men was not disclosed. Donovan was one of eleven persons indicted in connection with a smuggling system in which the government officers said young boys were employed to bring liquor across the international boundary in rowboats. James Sulvania, owner of export dock at Bridgeburg was also indicted at the same time.

Andrew Johnson was elected to the Senate and served a short time after he retired from the presidency of the United States.

Where Families Sit at Church Weddings

By Mrs. Cornelius Beekman

DEAR MRS. BEEKMAN:

I Should the bride and bridegroom, in leaving the church, to go to the reception, leave the church in a limousine alone, or go in the machine with the bridesmaids and best man?

2. Does the bridegroom's family all on the right or left side in church?

They go from the church if the car alone.

The bridegroom's family and friends sit on the right of the aisle. You see, the parents of the bridegroom are the guests of honor at the reception, and tourists of honor sit on the right of the bride. The parents of the bride are the hosts of the occasion, and so they all on the left.

Washington, D. C. April 11—Diplodocus, probably one of the biggest animals that ever lived, had brains in its tail. Reconstruction by the National Museum of a skeleton of one of the "The creature, a form of lizard, did not have much brain power, however, despite its great bulk. It had taken six years for three men to put the skeleton together. The bones were found at Diplodocus Canyon, Wyoming, by a Smithsonian party. The animal is believed to have wallowed millions of years ago in a semi-tropical swamp now covered by the mountains of north Utah. It was 80 feet long and weighed 15 tons.

A SHIP HOME

New York, April 11—"There's no place like home," the poet may have said, but in the case of Mr. Jefferies, retired Philadelphia broker, home is the good ship Caledonia.

On December 4, Jefferies sailed in the Caledonia for Europe. But he got as far as Glasgow, Glasgow, and decided to come right back with the ship. The Caledonia never sailed for the West Indies, Jefferies was still aboard. On two more cruisers he stuck, and when she reached New York on April 5 said he would be a passenger when she sailed for Glasgow again.

PAJAMA SUITS

London, April 11—Pajama suits are to display in London as the ideal uniform for nurses. At the annual Nursing exhibition, some 2,000 nurses who visited the show will be asked to discover overalls and pajamas as the garb to replace the time honored ankle length skirt of stiffly starched linen.

The short versus long skirt argument waged hot and heavy during the exhibition. Many nurses put themselves on record as violently opposed to the trusty well covered legs could produce additional length. Others claimed that a dignified appearance.

NEW YORK LOSES BIG TRACK MEET

International Meet Will be Held in Boston or Chicago

NEW YORK, April 11—By the Canadian Press—New York would be the scene of the international dual meet between the British Empire and the United States on August 27 if New York had a suitable quarter-mile track, and so Boston or Chicago will get this athletic plum, the outstanding track and field event of 1930.

Daniel J. Ferris, secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, in announcing the tentative date of the meet, declared that all arrangements except the selection of the venue had been completed. The British A.A.A. and the Canadian A.A.U. had accepted the United States' invitation and the suggested date, August 27, is agreeable to all. The British team has arranged to sail for home on the 29th.

All members of the foreign relation committee of the A.A.U. favored New York as the site of the meet, but unfortunately for New York, there isn't a "big time" cinder path in the neighborhood. Boston and Chicago have been held in the Yankee stadium from time to time, but the Stadium, with a five-lap track, presents an awkward arrangement for a meet to which a quarter-mile track is desirable. Moreover, the stadium officials would not permit the infield to be dug up for a steeplechase water jump, nor would they permit the hammer throwers and javelin throwers to play on the turf.

Meanwhile Boston, through Harvard University, and England A.A.U. and Joseph B. McCabe, chairman of the Olympic Games Committee, has expressed a willingness to play host to the international meet. Chicago, through the Central A.A.U., the South Park Commission and Avery Brundage, president of the A.A.U., is also bidding for the meet. It will be held either in Harvard Stadium or in Soldier Field, Chicago.

The dates of the National A.A.U. championships, usually held around July 4, will be moved back to within two weeks of the international meet if the nationals to serve as a tryout for the United States teams. The Pittsburgh Stadium has already been selected as the site for the national junior and senior games and creations, a three-day affair. The international meet will follow shortly after the close of the Pittsburgh games at Hamilton, Ont., on August 23.

The United States and the British Empire have met in international meets on two occasions, after the Paris Olympics in 1924, and after the Amsterdam Olympics in 1928. The United States won both times through preponderance of field event strength. The programme for this meet is arranged entirely on a team basis, that is, all the flat and hurdle races are rejected from the 400 meter relay to the four mile relay, and all the field events are decided on aggregate performances of three competitors on a side. One point is awarded for a victory in each event. This is the programme for all international meets held in England.

That this programme should also prevail for the first Anglo-American meet on this side is not a surprise to some, but Secretary Ferris points out that this distance event was a regular one before the 1924 Olympics and both sides agreed to the arrangement. It is a long programme that lacks appeal through the absence of sprints and individual races. Forty thousand spectators at Stamford Bridge in 1928 thought well of the meet and in the course of the rivalry there were returned a 47 2-5 quarter, a 1.53 half mile and a 4.16 3-5 mile by Morgan Taylor, Phil Edwards and Cyril Ellis. That was the day George Baird, Morgan Taylor, Ray Barbuti and Emerson Spencer created the world's record of 3:14 1-5 for the mile relay. Ed Barnes vaulted 13 feet 9 inches for one British record and Ed. Hamm, the Georgia Tech star, jumped 25 feet 1 inch for another British record.

Letters to The Sport Editor

Sport Editor—
Ontario Intelligencer,
Now that hockey, basket-ball and indoor baseball seasons have passed, the ball fans' thoughts naturally turn to the out-door sports. It appears now that ball will be well organized in this district shortly, that is for Senior and Intermediate ball players, but the regrettable fact is, that nothing much is being done, towards the fostering of Junior players. The Junior Order of Moose made a start last season and started with more than fair success. Again this season, this organization made an effort to form a league in this district but either clubs did not display interest and the proposition has to-date failed.

The following plan if adopted would be a fine move. Here it is: "If the Junior Money, and the three service clubs of the city—the Y's men, Kiwanis and Rotary would each sponsor a junior team of boys, four teams would form a mighty compact City League. In fact there could probably be three or four series, Midgets, Juveniles and Juniors according to age. The Midgets and Juveniles might play on Saturday mornings with boy managers and one adult in charge. The Juniors could play evenings, as might be necessary on account of most of the boys likely being employed. All games could be played on the fine diamonds at the Collegiate. Saturday morning games would certainly be open dates, while arrangements for one or two evenings a week could be made for the Juniors when the diamond would not be in use. All teams could have their managers and if a responsible member of each service club were allotted a night to be on hand for supervision, if games played twice a week say first night be taken by a Y's man, the other night by a Kiwanian and so on this would make the work light for all. To be on hand for an hour or so each fourth night would not be a hardship. One set of catchers' equipment, a dozen balls, and two or three dozen bats, the main items of equipment, costing to all about $100 would take care of the various leagues. Players for other positions will very likely turn out with their own gloves.

As to uniforming of teams, this should not enter into the matter at all. Let the young players have a chance to learn the game the purpose to be served. Uniforms mix not the players. The Kiwanis and "V" are to be commended on their excellent work among the boys and athletics.

Will one of these clubs not make the move towards the ball? Do not delay time will—and their success will be watched with interest by the sport-loving public and be appreciated by the young-sters.

Several Senior players would very likely lend much advice to the beginners.

One who is interested in Clean Sport.

VANDERPOOL WIN S FEATURE IN ROMP AT BOWIE, MARYLAND

BOWIE, Md., April 11 — Vanderpool, the unbeaten, was a ridiculous favorite in the Kindergarten blankets at Bowie Thursday for Mrs. M. J. Allen. All through the season "Bill" Kelsay, who had the mount, was making him up and letting him get away with the colt galloped along with his ears pricked. By reason of being eased through the stretch furlong, the son of Campfire had been the Hancock Stable's favorite at length, but he had literally galloped the half-mile in :47 under a burden of 124 pounds for the $1,000 purse award.

Another delightful day resulted in a big attendance being on hand. The track was at its best and the betting for the Kindergarten was attractive.

Little time was lost at the barrier in the Kindergarten, Caough and Mrs. Frank acted so badly that he was disqualified after the race. Pompeo became Vander Pool a nog leaving the barrier, but Mr. Allen got the strong side in a half dozen strides and then on by to take the lead. Golden Legend from Norwood Stable was third in third place and Benny Frank led Admiral Day Cabellero. There were only other starters.

ROETTGER GOES TO GIANT TEAM

In Return New York Gives up Farrell and Fisher to Cardinals

NEW YORK, April 11— Bartering in the baseball world of the National League has gained momentum as the opening of the season approaches. Yesterday the New York Giants gave an infielder and outfielders, Ernie Farrell and George Fisher, to the St. Louis Cardinals for an outfielder, Wally Roettger.

This east-west deal followed another between the Giants and Brooklyn Burleigh Grimes, one of the league's star pitchers, had been transformed into Fred Fitzsimmons, a Giant hurler.

The exchange of talent between St. Louis and New York will be regarded as one of the ideal trades that "will help both clubs." Manager McGraw is understood to have been on a search for weeks for an outfielder who hits righthanded while the Cardinals have been woefully short of reserve infield materials. Roettger hits right handed and Farrell is a capable utility infielder for utility purposes. Fisher may be used by the Giants — possibly Rochester— for the Cardinals do not need outfielders.

BRITISH NET STARS PLAY AT HAMILTON

HAMILTON, April 11 — According to a cable received this week by Geo. S. Mithen, president of the Canadian Lawn Tennis Association, from E. G. Cooper, the Association's representative in London, the English Lawn Tennis Association's special committee on British Empire games has decided to recommend that a team from Great Britain be sent to Hamilton, providing assurance is given that the tennis events will be complete by August 30.

This pleasing bit of news is announced by M. M. Robinson, chairman of the committee of management of the Canadian championships, who has been in communication with the tennis tournament for the championship of the Empire will be a big affair, in keeping with the other events on the program.

When Mr. Robinson returned from Great Britain a few weeks ago it was with the knowledge that definite decision, as far as tennis was concerned, would not be made by the British officials until some time in April. In the meantime, South Africa, New Zealand and Bermuda had signified their intention of sending tennis players to Hamilton, while British Australia undecided. Great Britain's decision is of utmost importance and will, undoubtedly, result in Australia also undertaking to participate in the tennis events. Assurance that the tennis tournament will be completed by August 23, is being forwarded to England at once.

FELLED BY ROCK VICTIM MAY DIE

Described by Woman on the Southampton Road After Attack

SOUTHAMPTON, April 11— While Carl Teeman lay unconscious on a lonely road near Southampton, victim of a murderous attack from his vicious companion, Lily Long, aged 38, fled from the scene and boarded a train for Toronto without reporting the assault, police say.

While Teeman lay in hospital at Owen Sound, hovering between life and death, the provincial and town police swung into action and after hours of scouring the district, Harry Long, 45, was arrested on a charge of committing the attack, and Lily Long, said to be his sister-in-law, was taken into custody by provincial police when she stepped off a C.N.R. train at West Toronto station. The woman was removed to the Court Street station, Toronto, and held until a material witness.

A sharp-edged rock, buried with deadly accuracy, was the missile which struck Teeman to earth. According to police, Lily Long rushed a weapon from the huddled heap in the road without warning and struck the side of the injured. A little later a passing motorist picked the Teeman man's battered body. John's Hospital an examination revealed a fracture of the base of the skull.

Capt. Cherry was an genial captain, who has been hard at work for some time past planning the event, reported that he had secured the names of thirty Captains, thirty-two Mates and thirty-seven Engineers, fifty-one fishermen who had sought shelter at the last port." A good many of these are natives of Marysburg and Athol Townships.

Capt. Bongard, master his early life at Point Traverse and most of his life has been spent among those who wrest their living from the Lakes.

The captain invites everyone to send in names of their deceased mariners, etc., as it is impossible for him to secure them all. His address is Picton, Ont.

The Mariners' Service promises to be an outstanding one. The Captain is out at the Valley this week decorating the church with His preserves, models of ships, etc. Capt. Byron Bongard is to take part in the memorial service: Rev. R. B. Du the pastor, and an outstanding speaker, will give a short address. The male quartette will sing; Capt. Palmateer will read the roll of the dead; Mrs. Edward Rorke will recite, and Cherry Valley choir will assist with the music. Everybody is invited to be present as making it an event long to be remembered.

15 YEARS TO COME HOME FROM PRISON

TRENTO, Italy, April 11 — From the Fascist Court of Camp Isola on August Lorenzi, 38, departed, 15 years ago as an Austrian soldier to fight the Italians. He has just been returned after years of hardships to find himself an Italian citizen, known in the village, by the fortunes of war, became Italian. Lorenzi was captured by the Russians in 1914. He was sent to Semipalatinsk, then to Tomsk, Samarkand, Tomboy and Gorad. He was made to cut down trees until the work broke his health.

Then he farmed out to a miller, with whom he was working at the time of the revolution in 1917. The Bolsheviks sacked the town and burned up the mill. Lorenzi fled at night. He passed several years of inherent misery until in 1921 he became a farmhand. It was not until the following year he was able to send a letter to his relatives in Campi. He did not know that the war was over.

The next year, despairing of ever being able to leave Russia, he married the daughter of a farmer. In 1926 the authorities here, through the Italian ambassador at Moscow, began to exert influence to allow him to return. But the Soviet government refused to let him have married a Russian, with only the passport for four years. At last they let him go with only eight dollars and a few articles of clothing.

TORONTO MAN ENDED HIS LIFE

Body of Lieut.-Col. Towers is Discovered by his Brother

TORONTO, April 11—Worried by financial troubles Lieut.-Col. Robert, J. Towers, prominent military man and member of the legal firm of Cook, Gooderham and Towers, went to a room on the fifth floor of the King Edward early last night and shot himself through the right temple with a .22 revolver.

Mr. Towers was talking to his brother at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. When he did not go home for supper his family became worried and Mr. Towers telephoned to his brother. A. S. Towers, 19 Aylmer Avenue. His brother went to the King Edward Hotel and going to room 136 found the lifeless body on the bathroom floor with the revolver beside him.

Mr. Towers immediately called the chief coroner, Dr. M. M. Crawford and told him of the tragedy. Dr. Crawford went to the hotel and after making an examination, released the body for burial.

CLAIM RUSSIANS KEEP PRISONERS

Say Prisoners of War Have Never Been Returned to Fatherland

Leipzig, April 11—An allegedly authentic report that 12,00 former German prisoners of war are still missing is published by the Leipziger Neueste Nachrichten. It is claimed that this is the most startling figure in the result of careful compilations by the leagues of former war prisoners. The leagues have jointly filed the following demands with the German government.

1. That the whereabouts of former prisoners forcibly detained in other countries Department of Justice be done by foreign governments for work done during their imprisonment. Creation of Ministry of Missions is based on the claim that thousands of former German soldiers are detained in Siberia where either because they have married or have become subordinated to the Bolshevist religion they are not permitted to return to Germany.

It is further stated that many German prisoners reported as dead by the French and British authorities in 1919 have since been found alive in the French foreign legion. These cases are declared to furnish ground for the German government in support of Franco an explanation as to the whereabouts of 60,000 German prisoners who have never returned home.

In connection with the above demand it is pointed out that Russia, Roumania and Belgium have flatly refused to make any such comprehensions and that France, while acknowledging the debt in principle, has granted only 800,0 gold francs for 270,000 claimants which is described as far too little for the work accomplished by these war prisoners. Furthermore, only half of the 350,00 claims submitted to Great Britain have been acknowledged, from which it is argued that the British data must be either incomplete or unreliable.

In advocating a new international law to govern treatment of war prisoners, the German leagues assert that the governments of Russia, English, and French and Hungarian organizations have agreed to make the same demand of their respective governments.

Plans for ten-year war against all stock-killing animals have been approved by department of agriculture.

CAMBRIDGE IS FAVORITE BY SMALL MARGIN

Historic Boat Race Takes Place Tomorrow on The Thames

PUTNEY, Eng., April 11 — The battle of the Blues takes place on Saturday, when the great Oxford-Cambridge race will be rowed for the 82nd time in 101 years. The event, first rowed in 1829, will draw hundreds of thousands of persons to the banks of the Thames along the four and a quarter mile stretch between Putney and Mortlake.

Saturday's contest appears to be a toss-up, even though Cambridge has won the last six races. When the crews came to Putney a few days ago for the final stage of their long training season, the consensus of expert opinion was that Cambridge had the brighter prospect of victory. Two of their oarsmen, Reeve and Prideaux, changed places and the crew took on a new lease of life. Reeve, one of the neatest and most polished of oarsmen, brought into the boat harmony which had been lacking before. The Light Blues row a good "length," grip the water early and hold a firm stroke to the end. And if Cambridge are defeated it will not be because of weakness in the bows.

But Oxford has won many supporters since the crew came to Putney. They have unquestionably improved, having greater length in the water with a firmer and quicker "catch" with their oars. Every man in the Dark Blue boat is a genuine hard worker.

Impartial experts forecast that provided conditions are fair, Oxford will gain a slight lead in the first minute. Then there will be a grim struggle for the first mile. The crew capable of taking the lead after passing Hammersmith Bridge, about a mile and three-quarters from the start, would probably be able to hold it.

SOMERVILLE WON WILL PLAY VOIGT

Reaches Semi-final at Pinehurst by Beating Ryerson 2 and 1

PINEHURST, N.C., April 11 — G. Ross Somerville, of London, Ont., has turned out a par 71 to defeat J. R. Eyerson, Cooperstown, N.Y., two and one, in the second round of the North and South amateur gold tournament yesterday. George Voigt of New York took a decision from Phillips Finlay of Redlands, Cal., 4 and 3 with a 67 in the afternoon.

Somerville's spectacular putting help ed him to beat Eyerson after an eagle three on the long and treacherous sixth, he sank a long one for a birdie three on the ninth to give him a two-up advantage at the halfway mark. On the second nine, he continued his good work. He dropped a 15-foot on the tenth for a bruise three, sank a 12-footer on the 11th and 11-footer on the 12th and an 8-foot putt on the 14th.

Voigt started his brilliant work on the first hole with an easy par four. The defending champion shot par or better on every hole. He went into the lead on the second hole and from that time on was in front. He landed a birdie four on the third, repeated with a birdie two on the short seventh and again made a birdie on the eighth. Finlay was two down at the turn and was unable to stem the tide in the second round after that. Another birdie on the 11th helped Voigt's card and the match was over on the 14th which they halved. Finlay's card shows he, too, was shooting spectacular golf, making a 73 on the 18 holes.

Ross Emmons, Englewood, N. J., was forced to stage a brilliant comeback, after only a tie start to defeat J. A. Powers, of Pittsburgh, by a rise up count. Honours came to the turn one up, but found tough sledding early on the home route, losing the tenth eleventh and twelfth in rapid succession. Only a brilliant come-back gave him the victory. Wins on this finish and seventeenth squared the match and a long drive, followed by a perfect iron shot that put him on the green, gave him a part four to take the match on the home hole.

Donahue lost the first two holes when his approach shots were short and was unable to overcome this handicap throughout the afternoon. Three up at the turn, Hunter climaxed his play by a 30-foot putt on the sixteenth to take the match.

SPRINGLIKE WEATHER

The temperature for the past two days has been decidedly springlike. Yesterday's recordings at the local pumphouse showed a high of 46 with a low of 28 above zero. Today was much warmer with a temperature of 62 and 40 above zero. Probabilities for the tomorrow point to continued mildness with possible showers.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Congratulations Henry!

by

Louis P. Armstrong

Copyright, 1930, International Features Service, Inc.

Henry Huntington, assistant cashier of the Chestnut National Bank, had made a serious mistake. He had overpaid a customer one hundred dollars and was short that amount in his back.

"It was that New York draft old Enoch Tutwyler presented!" he exclaimed for the moment he settled off. And the realization did not bring consolation thought. Henry stood with his broad shoulders humped over the adding machine, his handsome dark brown furrowed in a scowl, remembering how Tutwyler had passed outside the window, his finger the pile of new bills, glancing furtively out of the corners of his shifting eyes to see whether anyone was observing him.

"He'll be glad of a chance to get me in bad here," the youth continued his dark reflections. "Even if he gives back the money—and I doubt if he will willingly, he'll do all he can to make it seem to Don Frazier that I'd been careless. He knows Henry and I think a lot of each other and he's been waiting!"

How one hundred dollars is a considerable sum for a small town bank is one thing the carelessness of a clerk, and Henry was just a clerk for all his title, which had been given instead of a raise the first of the year. If he reported the shortage to Donald Frazier, the senior banker there was sure to be a row. He, had go to see old Tutwyler and make an appeal.

So eating getting dinner at the Marina, where he boarded, young Henry set off for the three mile walk to Tutwyler's farm, to have it out with the old man.

There was no moon, and a sharp wind began to blow. Looking up, Henry observed darker clouds piling up in the dark sky, and knew a storm was brewing. At last he saw the lights of the farm house, nestling in the hills, and it dawned him immediately that after all, he did have a kindly feeling for Em'a uncle, crabbed and miserly as he was.

At the door Em herself appears in sorrow to his knock.

"Uncle's not in yet" she said, hesitatingly, in response to his inquiry. "But come in, Henry, and wait for him. He had to meet a fellow down at the station. He's been gone long enough, I should think."

He smiled reassuringly when he saw shrieked. "What proofs have you the anxiety in her pretty face. "Not against me?"

a thing, Em. Just a mistake I made!"

"I—I don't understand you, Mr. Tutcashing a draft for your uncle. I supposed he found it out directly he got home."

I've followed her into the sitting room where an oil lamp was lighted on the centre table. She sat down with some sewing, motioning him to take the chair on the opposite side of the hearth. It was a shabby, but cozy old room.

He relaxed in the warmth and tried to talk, but Emily seemed uneasy and abstracted.

Finally she sprang up and said: "I hear uncle now. Maybe I'd better run out and let him know you're here waiting." Her face was flushed and there was an unnatural gleam in her dark hazel eyes.

"Oh, don't bother to do that," Henry began, and broke off when he heard a thumping on the ground outside, as though something heavy was being dragged across the boards.

He next heard the whine of old Tutwyler's voice. "You're not paying me enough to keep this stuff here and you know it. It's a risk and it's the last time . . ."

"You made the bargain, Enoch and a tough one it is. Stop grabbin'. As to the risk, nobody would think . . ."

The last words were incoherently low and the voice was gruff.

A moment later the sitting room door opened, and old Tutwyler entered, stood blinking in the glare of the lamplight.

"Hello Enoch," Emily began timidly. "Henry Huntingdon's here to see you. He's been waiting for . . ."

"Has he, has he?" Tutwyler turned savagely upon the astonished youth. "What's your game, sneaking into a man's house?"

"Why, Mr. Tutwyler," Henry remonstrated angrily, "I simply came to ask about the New York draft I cashed for you today."

"Mean it's no good? Well, ain't my money good? It was Don Frazier and tell him of your impudence."

"It is not that the draft isn't good we haven't had time to collect it, sir. But I just discovered I'd overpaid you a hundred dollars. I paid you in new bills—and I guess they stuck. That's what I came to tell you about, and—"

Henry broke off and stepped back hastily, for Tutwyler had advanced upon him, fists clenching his gnarled face working.

"I—I don't understand you, Mr. Tutwyler. I'm only saying that you give back the hundred dollars so my cash will be correct."

Slowly old Enoch lowered his fist, still scowling. "One hundred dollars, is it?"

"That's right," said Henry in quiet relief. "You understand, dont you? I paid you five hundred instead of four."

Tutwyler pulled a worn pouch from his pocket and peired off two tiny dollar bills. "Satisfied?" he sneered sarcastically.

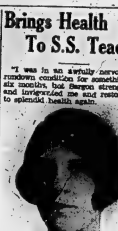
On Henry's way back, to town the storm broke. He was so buffeted by the wind he sought shelter in the shed of the old mill, halfway up the hill. As he stood in the door, he noted a gleam of light from the left, heard voices above him there. He recognized the tones, too—Sid Smart and Tom Walker, deputy sheriffs. Curious, he strained his ears to hear what they were talking of. Now they were speaking louder, he was able to catch the drift of their words. He listened aghast, he felt dazed, and a chill ran down his spine. For the first time in his young life, Henry had come face to face with the law.

Presently he stepped noiselessly off the doorsill, cautiously made his way out upon the highway. Then he broke into a run, and despite the torrent of rain, undeterred, placed steps by Tutwyler's farm. He must speak to old Enoch, or . . .

But it was again Emily who came to the door, bearing a lighted candle, her face whiter and her eyes filled with fear. "Has anything happened to uncle?" she cried after you, saying something about a mistake, and I was frightened at the cold way he spoke. And he'd been acting queer lately. Henry Strange men have been here trying to persuade him to something . . . I've heard things they said."

Nothing's the matter, Hon, "pshaw Henry replied, with a nerve, Enoch," said Don Frazier, the cashier," sending three boys to scour you last night." Tutwyler glowered fiercely, until Em's tears met those of young Henry behind the candle flame. Then he looked shabbed.

"Something else ailsen like you," Frazier continued indignantly. "It's a little too much. And the boys found a crate of the stuff in your barn, place down the road in some bushes. Boot-leggin', eh? Guess you'll have to square with the sheriff."



"Sheriff, eh?" he exclaimed" exclaimed young Henry. "I take that kindly, Mr. Frazier. I hadn't told you?" noting the astonishment on the old man's face. "The little mink! It was Em's doing. I didn't want him in business. Remember I'd started back to the farm? Em's uncle's action to come back for another word with me, when she agreed to marry me, Mr. Tutwyler."

"Humph," said the old man, looking keenly through his spectacles. "You come back, eh? Ah' I've been wrong'ering . . . right smart chap, sint ye? Reckon I'll be congratulatin' you after all, Henry."

"Thanks," the young assistant cashier spoke briefly, returning to his duties. He whistled as he counted the new bright in the safe, thought that he could be larger fair his prospective uncle. He hadn't learned his wife had been hiding behind the bookkeeping desk in which had persuaded him to do something wrong and foolish. Why wasn't Em going to marry him? He'd run out and spread the news to her that very afternoon.

CAUTION NEEDED HANDLING BEES

MONTREAL, April 11.— Express companies are called upon to handle many strange shipments in the course of their everyday work, but one item of business which is developing, according with the Canadian National Express rates for more than usual caution and care. This is the transportation of shipments of live bees to various destinations in Canada. The total shipping season lasts from April 1st to July 1st, and an increasing number of consignments to apiarists are being handled each year. Apiarists find it necessary to carry their bees over the winter season and many buy new stocks each year. The bees are shipped to them during the months of April, May and June. The insects are usually handled in wooden crates or cages with wire cloth top and bottom to prevent escape, protected by an extra cover of wood with proper space for ventilation. Some of the boxes contain wooden frames on which the bees build their combs. Careful handling of the shipments is necessary in order that combs may not be jolted loose from the hives, for in this manner sometimes the comb cells are broken, allowing honey to flow over the bees, suffocating many of them, or suffocating the Queen Bee which renders the colony useless. The bees in transit must also be protected from exposure to sun and care must be taken to see that they have sufficient air.

A word of warning issued by Canadian National Express to its agents and drivers says: "It is pointed out that these bees (some which have escaped from hive as box) will not sting unless seriously disturbed. If so disturbed, the bees will fight back; otherwise you need not fear. You can pick them up handle them gently without fear of being stung. Go ahead and treat the shipments carefully regarding the loose bees. Don't fight them."

And the later sentence, according to many of the express drivers who have received the advice, is likely to be readily concurred in by all concerned.

Are You Letting High Distribution Costs Eat Away Your Profits?

Model "G-6" 5-Ton Heavy Duty Speed Wagon with Rex 2-Speed Rear Axle Unit Optional

How Many Leading Industries Are Now Meeting the Problem of Lower Distribution Costs—Increased Business

SELLING your product or your service is merely one cost of doing business.

Before you can figure NET PROFITS, the cost of making has to be charged off.

Hence in today's strategy of business, trucks are called on to perform two important functions: (1) Reduce distribution costs. (2) Increase business.

High distribution costs DECREASE profits. Lowered distribution costs INCREASE profits. No argument is needed to prove this.

That's why the slow and cumbersome, fuel-eating, "heavy" trucks of yesterday are destined to disappear from the streets.

Their first cost is too high. Their upkeep is too high. Their depreciation is too great. They INCREASE distribution costs . . . often to an unsafe point. That's one charge against them.

The next is they're too CUMBERSOME for modern traffic.

Hence too SLOW. They set up two measurable obstacles to increased DECREASED business.

They make the cost per load of delivery too high by REDUCING the potential NUMBER OF LOADS per day. And . . . they LIMIT the radius of your business to a dangerously small area in this highly competitive age.

Thinking men are realizing this point more and more every day. Dead weight in trucking to them is DEAD EXPENSE . . . lowered profits . . . limited trade areas. They seek a more modern, LESS COSTLY way of delivery. And find it now in Fast Speed Wagons that are changing the whole viewpoint of modern business on economical haulage.

Speed Wagons . . .
The Modern Way

To meet that situation, Reo—world-leader in high-speed, low-upkeep, long-lived transportation—has developed a distinctive type of Heavy Duty haulage that offers truck owned Speed Wagons that are changing the whole viewpoint of modern business on economical haulage.

To meet that situation, Reo—world-leader in high-speed, low-upkeep, long-lived transportation—has developed a distinctive type of Heavy Duty haulage that offers truck owned Speed Wagons that are changing the whole viewpoint of modern business on economical haulage.

Its advantages are marked and many. Some are exclusive; some are not. And some trucks may offer One of its advantages. But no other offers all. For there is no other complete truck.

One company operates a fleet of 1,348 Reo Speed Wagons. Hundreds of others operate fleets of 5 or more. Consider what that means.

There is a Speed Wagon for every hauling need—wheelbase sizes up to 210"—and models with trailers up to 15,000 lbs. GM-80

Colored Race Wants Leader

(Chicago Defender)

Hasn't the race a single leader whom it can follow. Haven't we 65 millions out of bondage, one person capable of directing us to that position where we can take our place among the great races of the world? Must we go on and on forever floundering among the rebellions in the race for a foothold under the sun?

We are worried. Frankly, the situation is dark. It seems that now we are farther from being able to follow a leader than we were in the days when we were unable to think coherently as a race. We are still dubious about those who would help us. We are the first to pull down those of the race who manage to get in a position to give attention to the tribulations of others. We cannot lead ourselves and we refuse to allow others to lead us.

Yet we must have a leader—someone upon whom we can depend—if we are to make progress. We must have someone to speak for us, someone who can outline the goals we are to follow, someone to guide us as we march along the way. Every race, every group has progressed, has had its leaders. There was Moses, the idol of the children of Israel. Italy has had its Caesars and its Mussolini. France her Napoleon. Germany her Bismarck; India her Gandhi; England has had Cromwell Gladstones and Disraelis. Even young America has shown us leaders in George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

But who have we? Who is there that we can or will follow—whose advice we will accept? Whither are we headed—how can we achieve when we ourselves recognize that we are leader less, yet will not elect one? Is it not about time we were getting together?

45 YEARS AGO TODAY SOLDIERS LEFT FOR WEST

Maritimes Bade Farewell to the Contingent to Roll Rebellion

EXPERIENCES WERE TOLD

Halifax, N. S., April 11—By the Canadian Press—Today was the forty-fifth anniversary of the departure from Halifax of Nova Scotia's contribution to the suppression of the Red revolt. Recalling the second Red Rebellion in March, 1885, C. W. Kelly, a member of the Halifax Provincial Battalion, writes that when the uprising was reported to be serious, additions of militia were ordered from Upper Canada and Halifax. On the morning of April 11, 1885, the Halifax Provincial Battalion, comprising 396 officers and men, departed for the West. The occasion is the date when Halifax was noted as a military city, provided the largest and most enthusiastic procession that ever throughout the streets, met with the various military bands, the Imperial forces sent 5,000 strong, and thousands of citizens wishing the soldiers Godspeed.

A particularly trying feature of the journey was the marches across "gaps" or spaces where the rails were not laid. At the time railroad passengers going east had to pass through the United States, but as Canadian troops under arms were not permitted entrance there, the battalion could not take advantage of the entire regular route, and the development of Canada at the time of the rebellion was at such a stage that only one train a week, a mixed passenger freight, passed through Moose Jaw.

At Qu'Appelle the Halifax soldiers were presented with a silk flag which is now in the Province House here.

The prairies were the scene of a good deal of hardship. For almost a month the mercury went down near zero every night. The men slept in thin duck bell tent and lay on bare ground. Arising in the morning the first job was to break the ice in the water pails in order to perform their ablutions. The clothing was heavy and appreciated during the first six week, but when the hot weather arrived the appreciation disappeared.

The order of the privates whose pay was fifty cents a day, was dampened when they learned there was no allowance for their dependents and the only assistance the families would receive must come from a committee of citizens who undertook to see that had their paid until food provided.

During the first week's travel by train the soldiers, packed two to a seat and surrounded by their equipment, slept where they sat and ate once a day. Part of the journey ahead of the Superior was done in flat cars. Six miles an hour was the speed sometimes and the engine was derailed occasionally.

After a good sleep in a Hudson Bay Company warehouse, the soldiers marched across the first gap, taking a short cut across a lake and walking in water over the shoe tops. The experience was particularly difficult owing to lack of exercise during the week's train ride. The next day another gap appeared, a repetition of the first. The third gap was an ordeal. The soldiers walked until 10 or 11 p.m. Fortunately hauled cars with berths were waiting. One man died from exposure the next day.

It took eleven days to reach Winnipeg where the men were quartered for about a week. Then they moved to Swift Current for three weeks. On May 8, three companies were ordered to Medicine Hat, on May 12, two companies were sent to Saskatchewan Landing and on May 23 the main part of the Battalion started back to Moose Jaw, where the men, still wearing heavy clothes, were drilled in the heat until fainting in the ranks was frequent. Later, the afternoon drill was discontinued.

On July 1 the Battalion was reunited and left on the 5th for Winnipeg starting out for home after a week's delay. The welcome at Halifax was treasured by a torch light procession with bands of the Imperial regiments all the militia in the city, firemen, and various lodges and societies.

The Canadian Government presented every man in the Battalion with an 80-acre script of land, but no one knew where the land was or how to farm it, so the scripts were sold at an average price of $75.00 each.

Last year about twenty members of the old Battalion met at Halifax. Probably fewer will gather this year, to recall incidents of other days and sing "The Red River Valley." Another score of the veterans are probably living, circumstances preventing them from joining the reunion.

This compares with an estimated 200 telephone conversations per head per year in the United States.

The School Strap

By a short piece of news from Sault Ste. Marie we gather the information that a thief broke into the school house there, and in the course of his o'ation mutilated all the rubber straps which he could find in the desks of the teachers.

That would be, at best, a short-lived victory for the scholars, because it is possible to replace these accessories.

Spare parts like rubber straps can be secured by return mail, or it might even be possible to go into a store at Sault Ste Marie and have rubber belting cut in proper length for the mean sort of work which such a strap is called upon to perform.

We have often wondered if there is anything in the training which teachers receive which gives them an idea of how and where to use these straps. It is not at all difficult to recall some school principal who had a method which seemed to be a trifle harder than any other strap; it was not a bit longer than its contemporary straps. The teacher had an inner ear all his own, for at one end was a wooden handle.

The technique was superb, and it was varied for girls and boys. The girls would be taken to the corridor and there would be administered a certain number of switches just between the knees. Boys of the class could not judge, but we always had a sneaking suspicion that they were of the sort where mercy tempered justice.

The boys received different treatment. They were marched up to the front to get their bitters. Some days the teacher had to make the trembling lad bend over a chair and the strap seemed to come into all its glory and dignity of a superlative instrument of torture on such occasions. We are not saying the exact spot selected for the punishment, but it was a trifle difficult for a lad to sit down comfortably after the offence to which he was guilty had been fully expressed in military terms we believe it would be referred to as a rear attack.

So pupils in Sault Ste. Marie should not become mentally exuberant over the mutilation of the rubber straps in the schools.

INTEREST TAKEN IN WORLD GRAIN EXHIBITION 1932

Possibilities Exist For Stimulating Quality of Cereal Crops and Agricultural Knowledge

REGINA, Sask., April 10 — By the Canadian Press —In all parts of the globe grain growers are preparing today for an historic gathering at Regina two years away. Every nation has been invited to send its commissioners to the two week World's Grain Exhibition and Conference, to be held in the Saskatchewan capital in July and August, 1932, and representatives of virtually every nation are certain to attend.

Attention focussed on the grain-growing industry the world over adds to the importance of the meeting sponsored by Canada's government, by the governments of the provinces, as well as the city of Regina and important business and financial institutions. Most apply, the gathering is to centre in the most fertile grain belt of the world's greatest wheat exporting country.

"Canada hopes to learn much at such a conference," mentions Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King, one of the many prominent patrons of the exhibition, "but she stands ready also to do what she can toward the general advancement of knowledge" in cereal production." The Dominion premier says, has felt for some time that some very special effort looking to the improvement of the world's grain crop is essential if cereal production is to hold its own in relation to the world's growing population.

World authorities on agriculture, particularly those interested in field crops, will confer at the 1932 assembly and grain and other seed produced in different parts of the globe will be brought into open competition. Wonderful possibilities exist for stimulating interest in improvement of quality of cereal crops and in disseminating knowledge of how to improve agricultural conditions generally, points out Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, referring to the gathering.

Countries intending to participate in the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference have been requested to form national committees to handle preliminary arrangements. Acting as connecting links with the organization in Canada, the committee will permit of negotiations being carried out between definitely responsible parties. Detailed rules and regulations are being mailed on request by the Exhibition secretary at Regina.

Practical and scientific endeavour along the most advanced lines is to be represented at the meeting. Executive of the Exhibition and Conference has expressed the desire that the Regina meeting may "constitute a clearing house for world thought and know ledge on every important branch of field crop production and marketing."

Ample accommodation for exhibits and for conference sessions is assured. Delegates and members attending the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference, from July 25 to August 26, in 1932, will be privileged to attend the Regina Exhibition covering all branches of agriculture.

Many are expected en route homeward, to visit the famed Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto.

Finest collection of seeds ever placed on exhibition is expected to result from provision of competitive classes for cereals, grasses, clovers and vegetable seeds. In addition, educational displays are to be staged by Canada's Dominion and provincial governments; other countries, too, are being invited to organize similar displays.

ESKIMO IGLOOS VERY WARM, COZY

CAMBRIDGE BAY, Victoria Island by the Canadian Press— Along the barren, frost-torn shores of Canada live a race of men—the Eskimos —who have achieved a simplicity in architecture that, rivals with the most radical in history. Dotted here and there within the Arctic circle are snow houses, called igloos, whose first designer must have been a man of rare genius.

Architecturally, the Eskimos can point only to the igloo as an achievement, for virtually no other building is used by the dark-haired, dark-skinned wanderers of the north. Part of the year is passed in the tupek, or sealskin tent, but this shelter is abandoned as soon as frost and wind have rendered the snow hard enough to be cut into building blocks.

But the igloo, hemispherical little snow-hut, is an oddity that borders on the marvelous. It is probably the only sturdy structure—unless, perhaps the tropics—that can be constructed with a single tool from material available anywhere in the Arctic. The necessary implement is the snow-knife, about 18 inches long, and the material is ordinary, every day northland snow.

Nomad nature of the Eskimo, no doubt, accounted the simplicity of construction of the cozy little dwelling places. Just two men are needed to build an igloo. From firm snow, windswept and frost-hardened, blocks are sliced with the snow knife. The blocks measure some 2 1-3 feet by 13 inches and are 10 inches thick.

Foundation-laying for an igloo comprises laying a series of blocks, inclined slightly inward, in a 12 or 15-foot circle. By skilful use of the snow-knife, the blocks are fitted closely together. Then two of the builders take his place within the circle while his mate hews new snow blocks from the pile prepared nearby.

A second tier of blocks is placed, with great nicety, on the foundation row, sloping somewhat more inward than the first. Such a courtship, a third tier is laid, with still greater inward inclination; row after row is added until the igloo's roof arches gracefully over the building's head. Finally, only a small hole is left.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

CHAPTER I

The dinner symphony in the O'Hara kitchen began, as it usually began, this afternoon, at about four o'clock. It began, of course, a little between four and five, on every ordinary day of every year; three hundred and sixty-five days in each fifteen-hundred-and-sixty, forty-five years old, handsome, resolute, adorable, knee to every chord and organ point, and occupied permanently in the position of conductor.

Between the bodies of three and eight o'clock every day, she thought in terms of cookery. Mentally, she ranged her forces about her: she could talk confidentially, or even forcefully, to any one of the six children, and still have going on quite uninterruptedly in her mind subtle considerations regarding raisins, and the cracked yellow bowl the tapioca, the cold biscuits, or the necessary trip to the corner grocery.

Feeding the children had been, by long odds "the man" had "died on her" seven years, years earlier. Confronted by all the problems of penniless widowhood, with a "posthumous" infant upon his way, and almost eight thousand dollars per annum to be provided from absolutely nothing, Teresa O'Hara had been conscious of no particular sense of starvation. Here was the marvelous viewpoint of Bella; or perhaps of Stephen. There was never more than one meal about which to worry, from Teresa O'Hara's point of view, and that was the next. Her sublime faith in a benevolent Fatherly power was unsurpassed in all circumstances. It difficulties arose, Teresa told the children calmly that there were privileged to help the Lord, carry His cross, a sign of friendship and favor. "And when the clouds broke, she commanded simply, "Sure what have we ever done that God would hear our prayers this way?"

"The Lord," Mary Kate, who was Teresa's oldest daughter, used to summarize it simply, "has rotten, contrary and going!"

Breakfast was usually a scrambled and hurried meal in the O'Hara house and most of the children had their luncheon away from home. But supper as Mrs. O'Hara called the evening meal, was always an event.

She loved the cooking of it. Domestic slavery was an eternal delight to her; her kitchen a kingdom. Even all of the fifty-seven years of selfish, selfish life, Uncle Miles Carroll, after death into a loved and admirable, if slightly eccentric family tradition, and it was amusement even as a father fully as Papa's own.

The children usually appeared in the pleasant afternoon kitchen, in the order of their ages. This on a certain wet March afternoon brought seven-year-old Pat home first; Pat who was blond and silent and mysteriously sweet, and adored by them all. Pat sat at the end of the kitchen table, and vouchsafed to his mother occasional shy cryptic comments upon school, confidences, and life in general.

While Pat was eating his bread and honey, Tess and Regina usually came in, flushed and jostled and a little cross from the walk home from the Sisters' School. Regina was pale, brown-eyed, slim and proud; Tess, dark, vivid and emotional like her mother. They were always sent upstairs to wash their faces and change their dresses, and they usually waddled and protested. But in the end they came down cheerful and comfortable, and while Regina, the younger, always made a great stir about study to evade domestic duties, Tess entered eagerly into dinner preparations. Tess would be heard begging her mother in an aside to repeat the formula for gingerbread: "Sour milk, Mother? And is that enough butter, Mother?"

Then Tom, seventeen, filthy, irresponsible, too big for his clothes, a born tease, a bad student, would come lumbering home. With Tom's arrival the symphony began to accelerate and deepen, voices were raised now, the sounds of running faucets, singing kettle, slamming oven doors, egg-beaters and meat-choppers found an undertone to the laughter, protest, whining, shouting of the young O'Haras.

Tom was the family "heartache". Sometimes his mother was too sharp with him, sometimes she spoiled him; it appeared to be impossible to be merely just to Tom. He sprawled all over everything he disorganized and demoralized everything. he pinched Regina even while he was comforting Pat for having tripped him up. He was a potential criminal, he was a potential saint, and in her secret heart his mother loved him, feared for him, puzzled over him more than she did all the other five together. Tom, at seventeen, was "finishing High"

After Tom, Martin came in. Mary Kate, nineteen, should have been next, for Martin was almost twenty-two, the oldest, and the mainstay of the whole shabad, crazy, joyous brood. He was a little smaller than Tom, and as handsome as his father had been, with the Irish beauty of a clean white skin stained pure red on the high cheek bone, blue eyes in circles of soot, a broad forehead truly expressing candor, innocence, intelligence, and a finely shaped head covered with a rich black waves of heavy, shiny hair.

Mart was everything to them all, father, brother, son, confidante, confessor, idol. They were all proud of him, his integrity, his wisdom, his record at school and in business. Mrs. O'Hara was "said my Mart," in everything she did. He was full of fun, he liked the girls, he was popularity's self but his mother always came first, with Mart, and after her the needs and claims of the children.

Reserved, little, straight-backed Regina got into his lap to tonight, when he took the kitchen rocker, and while he talked to his mother he brushed the child's contented fair head occasionally with his lips.

CHAPTER II

By this time the climax of the whole twenty-four hours was close upon the O'Hara kitchen. Potatoes were hot and steamy and brown in the oven, fish cakes sizzled in the pan, the table was crookedly but efficiently set, with sugar and spoons and rolled napkins in rings, and crackers and doughnuts and salt; the good smells of hot frying butter, tea, boiling asparagus and toast permeated the air.

"Mart, I tell you me that the Huntington girl give him the slip on the wedding day itself!—Hand me that scissors, Tom," Mrs. O'Hara said desperately removing the little tied bundles of asparagus from the boiling pot, and slipping them on a platter filled with strips of toast. She cut the wet strings and lifted them, steaming, from the plate.

"Yes, I saw it."

"What do you know about that, Mart?"

Mrs. O'Hara," said Tom, "to settle an argument, when do we eat?"

"We're waiting for Mary Kate."

"Mother, is, Cass coming?"

"I don't know will Cass be with her or not. You might as well put his cover kin on the table—Regina, look at little Pat, lovin' Tess so nice, and you doin' nothin'!"

"She's comforting a tired business man," Martin explained, kissing the back of his youngest sister's soft little blond head.

"Mart, I love you!" Regina whispered, putting her pipestem arms in a strangling embrace around his neck. "Mart," she asked, "is there any way to do fractions, except just to do them?"

"Listen, Mart," Tom said, in his hoarse, rager, oddly-pathetic voice. "If March afternoon brought seven-year-old Pat home first; Pat who was blond and silent and mysteriously sweet, and adored by them all, Pat at the end of the kitchen table, and vouchsafed to his mother occasional shy cryptic comments upon school, confidences, and life in general.

"Get out of my way, Baby," Mrs. O'Hara said to Pat. "Hand me that Tess. Move your chair, Mart, and leave Tom pull out the table. Give me that spoon, dear. I wonder whatever is keepin' Mary Kate?"

The O'Haras dined at six. Ten minutes were still lacking the hour when Mary Kate opened the yard door and was suddenly in the kitchen. The March wind was dark now, and a wet spring wind was blowing.

Cass Keating had walked home with Mary Kate, and stood beaming down her in the doorway. Both their faces were rosy from the exercise, cool spring air, and the evening breeze.

"I was kept at the office!" Mary Kate explained, dizzing her mother, sending Tess off with her hat and bag, and sitting down to pull little Pat into her lap, all with the effect of one swift gracefull motion. "Mother, have you enough dinner for Cass?" she asked.

"Don't talk like that!" Mrs. O'Hara said in real reproof. A guest in the house at supper time there might not be enough for him, indeed! She looked scorn at Mary Kate and indulgent apology at Cass.

"He brought a dozen pastries hoping you'd take him in," Mary Kate said, into Pat's bright hair. Her own hair was bright flaming golden red, and silkier than the child's. She and Pat and Regina were the tall, slim, red O'Haras The others were all black Gregsons or Carreys. She looked innocently at Cass, and they both laughed in complete understanding.

"I'm dining with your mother, not you," Cass said pleasantly.

"It's a wonder you wouldn't go wash your face, Mary Kate," Mrs. O'Hara said.

"Mother, is that ever th salt?"

"Mother dear, we're going to a dance, after. And since I have to dress completely for dinner—"

"Are you going over home to dress, Cass?" Mrs. O'Hara, asking the question, stirred the fish sauce with her right hand, and put out her left to touch the boiler.

"Tom, fill up the kettle,' she said. Mary Kate'll need the hot water!"

"Listen, Mom, I have to have a bath—"

"Where's the dance?" Martin asked, serving the fish, at the head of the table.

"Oh, Mart! Aren't you going?"

"Lermann's, is it?"

"Oh, Mart; Come!"

He was pleased by her ardor. But shook his dark head.

"Aw—I ought to go 'round to the library and read."

"You're always reading that old medical stuff!" Mary Kate said petulantly. But she loved him for it, none the less. Mart worked in a drugstore now, but he earned his whole first year in medical college, he was working for his second year. Every penny he could save went toward his fund; Mart spent his Sundays and some of his evenings playing chauffeur for the old doctor who had befriended him; he found all sorts of odd jobs for himself; he had no time for dances.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

"I was afraid, too," she said steadily. "But I'll never be afraid again. There's nothing in life which can make me afraid now."

Later, Tom was to recall these words and was to learn how true they were.

He found himself speaking vigorously, as though in argument.

"This will pass, dear. Oh, I know that you don't feel now as though it will, but believe me, it will pass. There is much happiness in store for you. Happiness you can't imagine now. I know what I'm talking about, Ardeth, really I do—"

She slowly trailed weakly away; she was so still.

He spoke again, scarcely knowing what the words came.

"Ken's mother died this morning."

A tiny shiver went through her heart. Her lips moved stiffly. Courteously, "I'm sorry."

But she was not. Tom's words were without meaning. She could not be sorry now. Not even for herself. She was benumbed. All of life had become meaningless and she struggled to keep it so. One should live on the surface of things.

There was bitter emphasis to Mary's voice. Oscar's inadvertences and deprivations had always grated on her. Added to that, she was honestly fond of Ardeth.

Tom came in later in the day, his broad face very sober, his brown gaze turned anxiously on the girl.

"I've come to take you to dinner, Ardeth."

She tried to smile and the gallant effort stirred Tom's heart strings. "Not tonight, old dear—"

"Yes, tonight," he returned stubbornly. "I don't want you to look in the big end say you have a date.

The thick lashes swept down. "I'm not good company—"

"Good enough for me!" Tom's voice was gruff. "You don't have to talk if you don't want to. You—shouldn't be alone, Ardeth."

"Alone?" she echoed. Then sharply

"Alone!"

Tom took her to a small restaurant where they would not run into acquaintances. As they faced each other across the table, Tom felt his heart sink. He found himself thinking of a bird with its wings clipped.

Something she had read long ago came to her mind. "Dig deep in the earth and you come to water. Dig deep into life and you come to tears."

It was easy enough in the daytime to keep up the pretense to herself. She filled every hour with work. She courted responsibility. Going down to the import houses in search of curios. Interviewing drummers. Trimming window-cases, checking up. Going to the library for books which would give her the history of these lovely exotic things which found their way to Jeanette's store. She was the first down in the morning, the last to leave at night. The store became her world.

But at night—when she had locked the front door and started her lonely way home—then the mood had its way and, in her, things tortured her, keeping the wound always open —the sight of the flower stand at the corner where Ken had always waited for her. The sound of an auto horn, like the one on Ken's car. The glint of a man's hair in the Winter sunshine or the sound of a voice—these could make her heart leap painfully.

All in a moment she would be torn by the hot fingers of jealousy so that she ran up the steep hills in the dark in a mad and childish attempt to out-run her grief.

Night when she walked aimlessly into the early hours, holding her wet face up to the sky and with sorrow Crucified by her love.

Ovaltine is made from pure, fresh milk (not dried milk)—contains malt extract (not powdered malt)—and fresh eggs (not dried eggs). And is flavoured with a specially prepared cocoa.

IMPERIAL WIZARD ANSWERS QUESTIONS REGARDING K. K. K.

Rev. George Marshall of This City Interrogated By Reporter

QUESTION, ANSWER

Rev. George A. Marshall, pastor of the Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, and Imperial Wizard of the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Canada, in interview with a representative of The Ontario Intelligencer, answered the following questions for the benefit of those who are interested in the movements of this order. The interview was given to a reporter of The Ontario Intelligencer in view of a recent case in Western Ontario which aroused much public comment. The reporter's questions are followed by the Imperial Wizard's answers.

"I believe you are the Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan of Canada?" Answer—"Yes."

"Do you mind answering a few questions I have handed for publication?" Answer—"Not in the least. My do not love darkness as much as it appears ed."

"How long have you held the office of Imperial Wizard?" Answer about three and a half years."

"Does your office signify that you are the chief officer of the Ku Klux Klan for the whole of Canada?" Answer—"Yes, with the exception of two or three groups in the West who prefer to act independently."

"I presume you are familiar with the details of the case of Oakville and members of the Klan of Hamilton?" Answer—"Oh, yes, but as that matter is before court it would not be proper for me to discuss it."

"During your term of office has the constitution and ritual of the Ku Klux Klan been revised?" Answer—"Yes, most thoroughly. It has been adapted to Canadian ideals and is a purely British organization."

"Is it true, as has been alleged that the Klan entertains special hatred to Roman Catholics?" Answer—"It is absolutely untrue and I suppose from the fact that the Ku Klux Klan is a Protestant organization and every member a sworn Protestant and out for the defence of Protestantism, some have thought so, but surely that is our privilege just as it is the privilege of Roman Catholics to maintain an order that is distinctly Roman for the defence of that church."

"Are Jews and the colored races limitedated or boycotted?" Answer —"Certainly not. But we are strongly opposed to the mixture of races by intermarriage. There is nothing in the Word of God that justifies it and much that condemns it. I may say that in common with most fraternal organizations clansmen and clanswomen are taught that their first duty is to their country."

"How do you account for the severe criticisms to which the Klan has been subjected?" Answer—"The various editors, in the daily press, Misers the editors, statements by a Toronto Rabbi, a colored lawyer, besides correspondence through the mail, reveal clearly that they do not distinguish between the Ku Klux Klan of the U. S. A. and Canada."

"Is the Ku Klux Klan or Canada in any way interlocked with, or subordinate to, the Klan of the U.-S. A?" Answer—"No, their problems are not our problems and while I am not in a position to either condemn or justify their methods, as the Klan acts as a separate organization, we have a secret and distinct work to perform. They have no desire to dominate us nor we to interfere with them."

"Is Klux Klan has during the last five years held some thousands of initiations running all over the province and many annual field days with congregations numbering from a few hundred up to 25,000 and -not one charge of breach of the law or disorderly conduct I believe till now, has ever been registered."

"Would you have been wise to have changed the name of the order as well as the constitution?" Answer —"We should not! I suppose it would meet the approval of a good many if we did, because of the supposedly lawless acts said to have been committed in the U.S.A. Would you change your name because some persons elsewhere, had, in the judgment of your friends tarnished it?"

"Is it not true that the Klan has kept secret from the public all its records for?" Answer—"No, this has been freely stated at every public examination for the last five years and honest inquiries are still being answered if addressed J. S. L., P. O. Box 476, Station F., Toronto Ontario.

BUCKETING FRAUD CHARGED AGAINST SOLLOWAY MILLS

Brokers Are Now Remanded Until June 2 and Committed to Trial in Calgary

Winnipeg, April 11 CP)—Repercussions from the brokerage shake-up which commenced less than three months ago have sounded across the breadth of Canada. Prominent brokers have been arrested charged with "bucketing", fraud and conspiracy; provincial governments have joined in hurried parley; laws have been altered —and the future holds still further developments in store.

Charges of fraud and conspiracy laid at Toronto and Calgary hand today over the heads of Isaac W. G. Solloway and Harvey M. Mills, chief executives of Solloway-Mills and Company Limited, one of Canada's largest brokerage houses. On the Ontario charges the brokers are remanded to June 2; they are committed to stand trial Calgary some time in May. Both are free on bail.

The disposal of Canada's grain crop—attended this year by conditions unique in history of farming industry —has been linked to the brokerage situation by government action. In explaining the decision of the Dominion government to stand back of the wheat pool's indebtedness to the banks, Premier John Bracken of Manitoba, stated that one reason for the move was the danger that brokerage firms, affected by the current investigation, might unload their wheat holdings at an adverse time.

Though governments of the Provinces had been considering legislations into brokerage conditions for some months previous the first step in public was made early in January. Under instructions from Hon. J. F. Reid, attorney-general of Ontario, Solloway was apprehended in Vancouver and Mills in Toronto.

By mid-January all two brokerage firm heads had appeared in court in Toronto and Calgary charged variously of fraud and conspiracy. A series of remands postponed their preliminary hearings until the end of March, but on March 21, after five days of court session, the brokers were committed to stand trial at the next court of competent judiciadiction to sit in Calgary.

Meanwhile, things had been happening in brokerage circles. At Toronto arrest of 13 brokers and employees was brought about by Attorney-General Hon. W. H. Price on March 20. Five firms involved in the arrests — Solloway-Mills and Company, Limited; Arthur E. Moysey and Company, Limited; D. S. Paterson and Company Limited; Homer L. Gunson and Company Limited, and Stobie, Forlong and Company, Limited—were suspended from trading on the floor of the Standard Stock and Mining Exchange. On Feb. 1, however, all but the last-named- firm had been reinstated; and those arrested had been released on bail.

On the day following its suspension from trading on the Toronto Exchange the Stobie, Forlong' organization asked. At Winnipeg, Stobie, Forlong and Matthews, Limited, a separate organization with an interlocking directorate with the Toronto company, went into voluntary liquidation on January 31. Many attempts to locate Mr. W. S. Newton, resumed the company's operations on a restricted basis.

It was at the end of January that Attorney-General Price of Ontario announced that the Dominion-Provincial conference of attorneys-general was to be held. The statement upheld a fore cast almost three weeks beforehand by Hon. R. H. Pooley, attorney-general of British Columbia, that all provinces of Canada would co-operate in a nation-wide scheme to defend brokerage and financial firms.

When the session of attorneys-general eventualized at Toronto on Mar. 10, all but the Maritime provinces were represented. It was decided to agent to decide on uniform security frauds prevention legislation as a means of effective control of brokerage activities. Since that time legislatures of Quebec and Britain Columbia have approved Security Frauds Prevention Acts parallel with those already in force in Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Prince Edward Island.

At the present time a number of minor developments connected with the brokerage situation are still pending. Individuals have brought claims against companies and brokers said to be due on broker accounts; objections have been laid against transport of documents to Alberta for use as evidence in the Solloway-Mills case; smaller firms have sampled, and minor officials have been blamed for alleged illicit use of funds. But at present at tention centres on the appearance of Solloway and Mills at Calgary and Toronto within a few weeks.

Government of Alberta is attempting to make a test case in bringing officials of Solloway-Mills and Company Limited, to trial, contends Mr. Solloway, president of the organization. He stated here recently that he believed his company had been "picked on" because it was the largest brokerage firm in Canada.

Five charges are lodged against Solloway and Mills for trial at Calgary next month. Of these four involved alleged infractions of the Criminal Code of Canada; the other charge—fourth on the list—is based on the old common law of Britain which still survives for the Dominion. All charges are concerned with operation alleged to have taken place between May and Dec. 31, 1929, at Calgary.

The charges against Isaac W. C Solloway which read identically against Harvey W. Mills, except for name substitution, are as follows:

1.—That Isaac W. C. Solloway did unlawfully conspire with Harvey M. Mills, Harold Hendrickson, L. L. Mason and divers other persons to affect the public market price of stocks and shares.

2.—That Solloway did unlawfully conspire with Harvey M. Mills, Harold Hendrickson, L. L. Mason and divers other persons to commit an indictable offence—to wit, a contravention of Sec. 231 of the Criminal Code.

4.—That Solloway did by divers unlawful means and devices and by deceit and falsehood and other fraudulent means conspire with Harvey M. Mills, Harold Hendrickson, L. L. Mason and divers other persons to injure and do civil wrong to members of the public visiting the establishment of Solloway-Mills and Company, Limited, in Calgary, for the purpose of purchasing stocks, contrary to the peace of Our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

5.—That Solloway did with intent to defraud defraud the public and by means of false pretence obtain from persons unknown money and valuable securities.

Unemployment

(New York Herald Tribune)

When we read that there are 2,000,000 unemployed in Germany it inclines us to revise somewhat our estimate of the plight in which Great Britain finds herself with 1,800,000 out of work. Germany's population is 62,000,000; that of Great Britain 44,000,000. So even proportionately the British seem on the surface to be better off, and this notwithstanding the far greater degree of "rationalization" which the Germans have been able to introduce into their industrial plants.

A comparison of to-day's figures alone is likely to prove misleading. Un employment in Great Britain, at or near the present level, has been chronic for a decade. It has responded very sluggishly indeed to general business conditions. In Germany on the other hand, it has fluctuated within much wider limits, reflecting wholesomely the recoveries as well as the depressions in world-wide trade. There have been years, for instance—notably 1927 and 1928—when German industry drastically reorganized and modernized seemed definitely on the road to absorbing all surplus labor.

Naturally the hope is aglow in Germany's breast that another similar period is ahead of her once the present world depression has lifted. In England, unfortunately, no such optimism seems warranted. Her industries are not rationalized to take advantage of the upward swing when it comes. This is the real tragedy of her situation and it may be set down to the stubborn individualism of her industrialists who have shown themselves so reluctant to merge ancient methods and old plants and otherwise adapt themselves to the demands of modern competition. The Germans are more readily regimented in this as in other respects and hence their prospects seem the brighter despite appearances.

OXFORD FIRST LED

One of the Hardest Battles An-cient Colleges Have Fought

(Canadian Press)

Putney-on-Thames, April 13. —The light blue of Cambridge, a favorite from the start, swept past the Oxford crew at the three quarter mark today to win the annual Thames boat race classic. The Cambridge crew appeared relatively fresh at the finish while the Oxford eight was greatly distressed. Cambridge men rowed well within themselves throughout the course.

In the last stages of the race, Cambridge drew steadily ahead, leading half a length at Duke's Meadow and a three quarter length at Barn's Bridge. The official time of the race was nineteen minutes, fifteen seconds, which was not a record. The official margin of the Cambridge victory was two lengths.

A race was "rubber" contest between the schools. Of the eighty-one such contests Cambridge had won forty and Oxford forty, one race resulting in a dead heat. Cambridge for the first time in many years today has won more races than Oxford, forty-one against the dark blue's forty

Start Was Good

Both crews got away to a fine start. Oxford eight was afloat first, and Cambridge followed them two minutes later. Oxford took the lead at the gun, and at Craven Steps, half a mile from the start, led by a quarter length. Shortly afterwards, however, Cambridge crew pressed their attack to pass their traditional rivals and from then to the end were never in danger. They finished two lengths ahead.

TANK BURST AND WRECKED STAIRS IN SCHOOLHOUSE

Fortunately No Pupils Were In Tweed Consolidated School At Time

TEACHERS HEARD CRASH

Water Found Spurting In All Directions From Damaged Tank

When the pressure on the water tank became too great, an explosion rocked the Tweed Consolidated School on Thursday afternoon at 4.30, ripping away part of the stairs leading to the basement and leaving a small gaping hole in the interior wall. Fortunately all of the pupils had left the school and not one was injured. The tank which was of the latest design, was completely wrecked while the rooms in the basement were flooded and some damage was done to equipment stored in that part of the building.

The pupils had just been dismissed and the teachers were preparing to leave when there was a resounding crash from the direction of the stairway. Principal S. H. Connor investigated and found water spurting in all directions. Nothing could be done and thebasement was filled before the flow of the water could be halted. It was necessary to close the school yesterday until the damage to the stairs could be repaired and a new water tank installed. The tank is worth $400. Thework of repairing the damaged portions will be completed on Monday and school will be resumed.

Many Farmers Forced to Use Conveyances As Stalls

The largest market since the New Year's was held today. There was not a space on the market square that was utilized and many were forced to use their conveyances as a stall. The roads about the market were congested with motor traffic and it took considerable time to make progress from one part to another. The same condition existed on the lower market, all the stalls being occupied. There was a large quantity of produce offered with maple syrup the seasonable commodity in demand. Meeting at 8.30 last night the House was in session until four o'clock this morning and will meet again at 10.30 but there is little hope for prorogation until Monday. Turned an opposition filibuster by Government leaders, but indignantly denied by Conservative members, who laid the attack on the measure providing for the payment of succession duty, the house debated the bill for many long hours last night into the early hours of the morning. When adjournment was taken, progress had been regarded, ll whenever it may be sprung. Reports show a united party behind our great leader, Hon. R. B. Bennett, who is recognized even by many Liberals as a leader of ability. He is today the outstanding man in the House of Commons. In concluding his remarks Mr. Thomson said the Conservative party would be victorious when the election took place.

THURLOW TORIES PREPARED

J. H. Harris, M.P.

In his spirited remarks Mr. J.H. Harris referred to the fact that when he first went to Parliament he met the late Mr. Thomas H. Thompson, former M.P., and they became personal friends. The speaker spoke eulogistically of Mr. Tummon, whose ability to speak on agricultural matters was recognized to such an extent that he was sent to the Maritime Provinces and Western Canada to speak and no doubt he will be heard in Manitoba and other western provinces. "We are again at the cross roads and we should stop and consider well what is best for our country," he said.

Unemployment

Mr. Harris referred briefly to the unemployment which exists at present and he asked what had the government done in the matter. The problem has been before the government; the government has taken no action and the great rail of the responsibility rests with it. Industry finds herself yerking two, three, four and five days a week instead of a full week with a full pay envelope. Why is industry in such condition at this particular time? Because inroads are being made into the products of her manufacture in countries which, not satisfied with economic argument, are taking economic action whereby goods cannot enter their country but they are able to export goods to this country. In 1922 the value of imports entering Canada was $422,000,000 in 1929-30 the value was $870,000,000. Ever since the policy of the present administration first got a start, there has been an increase right along the lines of imports of those articles which take away from the workingmen of this country the chance to earn a livelihood. In the vegetable line, the importations in 1929-30 were $6,746,000 as compared with $3,626,198 in 1922. This is the product of work which has been performed in another country and which has been shipped into Canada, thereby displacing the work of our own citizens who wish to employ themselves in market gardening.

Dairy Industry

The dairy industry of this country is also being demoralized. In 1930, there was imported into Canada, 250,000 pounds of butter and in 1929 the amount imported was 24,536,000 pounds. Instead of us being a large exporter of butter we are a large importer. What are we going to do about it? How are we going to relieve the situation? The only way to relieve it is not by economic arguments, but by economic action and such will follow when the Conservatives come into power. It is time that all woke up to the situation that Canada should take care of herself in these final matters. Mr. Harris in concluding his address said he felt confident that the Conservative party would be returned to power at the next election and that a change in present condition for the better would take place. (Loud applause.)

J. F. Hill, M.P.P.

Mr. J. F. Hill, M.P.P., spoke briefly in reference to organization and stated that he was prepared to support heartily the nominee of the Conservative party and no doubt he would be Mr. Tummon. (Applause). He said he was to be over-confident but get every vote and the result would be the Conservative candidate would be elected by a large majority. A thorough organization is absolutely a necessity in what tells.

Mayor Reid

Mayor Reid said he was out to support Mr. Tummon and do all he could to secure his election by a large majority. His Worship referred briefly to his recent trip to the western provinces and he predicted that the Conservatives would make considerable gains in members. Hon. Mr. Bennett was a leader whom all could support.

Entertainment

The program given consisted of a recitation "Canadian Born" by Alan Helen Hicks, song by Mr. Bruce Martin. Piano duet by Misses Jennie and Mabel Hill, songs by the Tuxboro Glee Club, bag pipe selection by Mr. W. Logan; reading by Arnold Milligan and selections by the Osborne family consisting of Mrs. E. Osborne and daughter, Dorothy, at the piano and young son, Guy, playing the bones. Mr. Osborne was a feature of the evening.

A vote of thanks moved by Mr. E. W. Brown was tendered to the speakers and those taking part in the program, also a vote of confidence in Hon. R. B. Bennett, as the leader.

After the singing of the National Anthem refreshments were served. The evening was in every respect profitable and pleasing.

NIGHT SCHOOL PUPILS ATTAIN FINE AVERAGE

Woodworking Classes Have Edge for Regular Attendance

Night school classes at the Belleville Collegiate Institute had one of the largest attendances this year of its history, Every department put in a busy season and the attendance did not as in former years fall off after the first few weeks. Many of the pupils attained an average of 85 per cent. of the total attendance for the season, and a number will try the departmental examinations in June. The woodworking class heads the list for regular attendance, ten pupils out of the class attaining the 85 per cent. average, while out of the whole school a total of ten pupils established a 85 per cent. record, attending 47 nights out of a possible 55.

Stage News & Screen News

A Real Show Stage Attraction by the name "THE NEW MOON" played Montreal last week to $25,000.00 business.

The Talkie Theatres all look a flop. This is and news but true.

The management of the Capitol Theatre, Belleville, don't intend to wait till the Talkies improve (it took fifteen years to get the silent pictures near perfection) so has engaged a company of players that were good enough for Detroit 86 weeks. This is to Village attraction.

Since the hockey matches are over the liveliest place in the city is the "Capitol Theatre." Isn't it great to hear the natural voices and see actors and actresses in person on the stage, after being pictured to finish with talking mechanical contrivances.

According to the last edition of the "D'Board," one of the best theatrical papers and the Talkie Picture productions are on a stall to know what kind of stories to use next year. As the public has not been satisfied with some of the big producers are only making a few features.

Here is a secret: The Globe Theatre one of the finest theatres ever built and situated at Atlantic City, after intending to all the talkie equipment brought a Parent Reproducer, the most modern, without a cross hair of hesitories. This very same equipment is installed in your own city and the theatre is "THE CAPITOL"

THEATRE

CAPITOL

Patrons of the Capitol Theatre last night were delightfully entertained when the talkie "Everybody Happy" starring Ted Lewis and His Band was given. The story is flimsy, concerning a boy who comes from Germany to play in the Symphony Orchestra, but found his way in the realm of band. His father leader of the orchestra in Berlin and who had played command performances before the Emperor was horrified at the idea of his son playing in a jazz orchestra and finally leaves home. On a bright Christmas night the family is again united when Ted Lewis with his band plays for a benefit at Carnegie Hall. Of course there is a love story with the girl who helps him get to the top in his profession, cleverly done. Lewis steals the show with his clever playing of the clarinet and saxophone and his trick plug hat. The boy is a musical show man and all his numbers were snappy it was a real show to drive dull care away. The Michigan Players gave a tabloid at the end.

THE BELLE

"East is East and West is West and Never the Twain Shall Meet," the aged old theme of mixed racial marriages, forms the basis of Rex Beach's story, "Son of the Gods" done into a Talkie and shown at The Belle Theatre this week. Sam Lee, supposed son of the richest Chinaman in New York's Chinatown, tries to become an "American" but is pursued and cursed by the bar sinister until he becomes so embittered that he decided to bend the world to all that "American" means and dons Chinese clothes and tries to adopt Chinese thoughts, and do mean things to the whites. Of course there is a girl who finally decided that love is everything.

Surmounting even differences in nationality. Then Sam Lee falls from his high estate as a Prince of a royal Chinese house and becomes just the founding, the child of the gutter who became the "Son of the Gods" as an answer to the devout one's prayer, and the ending is not just satisfactory with all due deference to Rex Beach and the California prejudice against mixed racial relations—for most folks who read the book and saw the picture prefer dear Lee (Richard Barthelmess) as the "Son of the Gods" in truth than the son of the gutter in fact. However, it is a cracking good story and interesting picture so let it go at that. However, as a balm to ruffled feelings through the controversality of Rex Beach's story, Marguerite Forhan is offering for the next three days "Honey", which is full of crazy girls, twinkling feet, buzzing torros and twinkling tunes, a play for the tired business man and the rested hired man.

We speak of a ship as "she" because the Latin word for the word ship is feminine.

Did Not Seem to Miss Their Mothers On 400-Mile Trip

MONTREAL, April 12—Twenty-five hundred motherless babes all of the immigrants from the United States, arrived at the Windsor Street Station here Thursday night. They made the four hundred mile journey from Halifax to this city yesterday without any mishaps and reached their destination without a hitch carefully tended by Canadian Pacific Express men in charge of the trip. The lusty infants in spite of the fact that none of them was more than a few days old did seem to miss their mothers and took nourishment during the journey with no apparent loss of appetite. They are on their way to a large store in this city where they will in part be exhibited in the windows until such time as they can take up their lifework of increasing the sex supply of Canada.

Picton Woman Died Suddenly

PICTON, April 12.—(Special)—A peculiar coincidence in the death of Mrs. J. Nutley of this town, was that it occured on the fifth anniversary of her wedding, even to the hour.

Mrs. Nutley was in her 22rd year. She had attended a meeting of mothers at the Mission Church and after preparing her husband's supper, retired upstairs. There he found her shortly after life being extinct.

A post mortem was held and an inquest decided unnecessary. Mrs. Nutley leaves her husband and two young children, also her father, step mother and several brothers and sisters.

Mr. Arthur Pope has returned from Belleville to Picton, having taken a position with the Rubber Woodworking Co. Mr. Pape is a former resident of this town and for two years past has been foreman of Belleville Cannery.

Picton Harbor is now free of ice and the "Olen Allan" is being fitted for her first trip on April 28. Among the improvements is a coat of paint for the exterior. The Olen Allan is the only boat to winter here.

Lighthouse and county shores and on the Main Ducks and False Ducks are now burning. There is much ice in the Lake, fishermen report.

This is not a late spring by any means says, Mrs. T. F. Stafford of Bethel, who recalls that 45 years ago she with her father, drove to Picton with a sleigh on the 7th of April.

A baseball meeting is to be held Friday night in the Public Library to complete arrangements for entering the Bay of Quinte League.

LOST SEASON'S MUSKRAT CATCH IN A BAD FIRE

Earl and "Chick" Chapman Had Narrow Escape As Shack Burned

Frankford, Ont., April 12 (Special by Staff Reporter)—Fire which visited the shanty on the 8th of Murray wherein Earl Thompson and J. "Chick" Chapman slept almost claimed two lives and did take over five hundred dollars worth of muskrat pelts last Sunday, it was learned this morning.

Both men had been trapping all through the season, and on Sunday morning visited their trap lines, bring ing back a fair catch. As the buyer was due to be there on Monday or Tuesday, they wanted the pelts to be dry as soon as possible, so built a fast fire in their cookstove, hung up the pelts to dry and then laid down for some well earned sleep, as they had been out since early morning.

About two hours later they were awakened by crackling flames and the choking odour of smoke. Quickly realizing there own danger, they rushed for the door, and made their way to safety. The fresh air which came into the shack when they opened the door, however, gave the blaze new life and a few minutes, before any of the pelts which hung up or those which were ready for sale could be saved, the little frame shanty was a raging inferno of flames.

At the prevailing price of muskrat pelts, which is from a dollar and a half to one dollar and sixty cents, Mr. Chapman and Mr. Thompson are out over five hundred dollars. Since the date of the fire however, they have carried on and now have another one hundred pelts.

The Chapman-Thompson trap lines are situated on the Trent River about seven miles north and west of Frankford, behind Mr. Charles McNeil's farm.

Hastings Roads In Good Shape

Frankford-Wooler Highway Is Better Than Usual

FRANKFORD, Ont., April 12—(Special by Staff Reporter).—Roads in this district are for the most part good, with perhaps the most notable exception being from Trenton to Frankford. This road is very bumpy and rough, although the bottom is said remain. It is not known whether the government, which only took over this road as part of the Iroquois Trail, is intending to repair it this year or not, but it certainly needs it. Most motorists are driving from Frankford to Glen Miller on the east side of the river, where formerly they all drove on the west side.

From Frankford to Stirling the road is in exceptionally good shape and a scraper and team of horses is making it better all the time. The Frankford-Wooler road is also better than usual at this time of the year, due for the most part to the judicious use of gravel.

Frankford Paper Mill is Closed

Canadian Pulp Board and Paper Plant Shuts Its Doors

Frankford, Ont., April 12 (Special Staff Reporter)—The Canadian Pulp and Paper Mill plant here has closed down, and the eighty men employed there has a job now. This plant employs about one hundred and twenty five men, over two thirds of whom are married. Should the Paper Mills remain closed, which seems to be not only probable but very likely, Frankford will lose its leading industry, with a corresponding slump taking place in every other business located here. The complete shut down occurred yesterday, and many of the men were leaving today to look for work elsewhere.

Belleville—Stirling Road Is Re-Opened

STIRLING, Ont., April 12.—(Special by Staff Reporter).—The Belleville to Stirling Road was re-opened to traffic yesterday, and although there are spots where it is still none too good, this of course must be expected on a new road

Pupils Render Fine Concert

First Open Literary Night At Collegiate Was Splendid Success

Success attended the first open "Literary Night" held in the Belleville Collegiate Institute auditorium last night, in which the Public School, Separate school and B.C.I. took part. This is the first event of this kind to be sponsored by the Collegiate and it's unqualified success will doubtless make it an annual affair. Mr. Alan Sprague acted as chairman and in his address welcomed the large numbers which packed the large auditorium.

Each school did exceptionally well with a single one carried off the honours, as each had special numbers, in which the youngsters excelled. Little Miss Catherine Harris delighted the gathering with an Irish dialogue and dance, and tiny Dora Istead acomplished everyone by two well-executed piano solos. This graceful little tot can barely reach the pedal and her small fingers have some difficulty in spanning the keys, but nevertheless she plays better than many youngsters twice her age. Another pleasing number was a reading "Its Nothing to Laugh at" by Miss Patricia Meagher of St. Michael's School. This comical little sketch was given in clear, expressive style and the little artist was heartily encored. The two numbers by the Collegiate Institute, (1) Mrs. Jarvis's Waxworks, (2) Mr. Bumble's proposal, were both well executed and well received. Following is the program in full:—

TRENTON ROTARY CLUB HOSTS TO UNDERWRITERS

Trenton Ont., April 12 (Special by Staff Reporter)—The Trenton Rotary Club had as their guests last night the Belleville Life Underwriters Association members, about twenty from Belleville being present. A fine meeting was held. Mr. Harold Hellon, president of the Belleville Association, voiced the appreciation of the insurance men at the hospitality with which they had been received.

This is not a forced sale. The builders of Coffield Gyrator Electric Washers have moved into their new factory at Ha milton, and this sale commemorates the event, which is one of the biggest developments that has ever taken place in the Canadian washing machine industry.

On April 15th the price of Coffield Gyrator Electric Washers.

Goes Back to $160.00

This is final and irrevocable. If you want to save $21.00 buy your Coffield before the present stock runs out.

COST OF THE BRIDGE

When Belleville citizens were told that the cost of the proposed reinforced concrete bridge across the Moira River on Bridge street would cost about sixty thousand dollars, they seemed satisfied. To learn now that a firm of contractors will erect the bridge for over $6,000 lower than that figure must accordingly be welcome news.

The Holdcroft Company has agreed to construct the bridge for $53,855 and to have the work completed before the summer is too far advanced.

The committee of investigation is quite satisfied and has reported so to the city council with the result that they will be given the contract in a few days.

In some cases the acceptance of the lowest tender is not necessarily wisdom but in this instance the council committee and the council are satisfied with the responsibility of the company and their intention to give Belleville the best than can be given in the way of a reinforced concrete bridge.

GAS RATES

That there is a likelihood of a cut in the rate of gas sold in this city is welcome information to the people. If the reduction is made it will only be after the committee is satisfied that the present earnings of the plant justify a reduction will add to the revenue by causing a much heavier demand for the gas here.

Belleville has treated its gas plant in the past with scant courtesy and attention. It was given blows instead of being modernized and the inevitable happened in the deficits which began to show and then in the need for advances from the city treasury. There has been a good deal of money expended on the modernization of the plant and it is hoped that this money will have been spent to the best advantage so that the plant may be able to earn a profit.

The reduction which is hinted at will be the sign that the plant is on the way to profits.

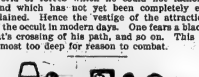
AIR SAFETY

There has been a protest that the safety of the air has been undermined, that air is safer than the public will admit, despite accidents which have happened. The Montreal Gazette discussing the question, says:

"The greatest factor in the success of aviation as a commercial enterprise is safety. Statistics just issued by the Department of Commerce at Washington show that travel on recognized air routes in the United States is becoming safer. A total of 78,940,161 miles was flown in air transport and miscellaneous operations during the past year. This is an increase of some 25,000,000 miles as compared with the previous twelve months. There were fifteen fatal accidents on regular air transport lines, which gives one accident to each 1,062,677 miles flown. In 1928 there was one fatal accident for each 884,120 miles. In what is recorded as the miscellaneous class, there was last year one fatality for each 375,000 miles. The previous year's ratio was one fatal accident to each 390,243 miles flown. Means for collecting data in 1928 were not as complete as they are now, and it is felt that if all the accidents that happened in the year named had been officially reported, the record in the miscellaneous class in 1929 would be seen to be quite as good as it was in 1928.

"Combining the two classes of flying, the statistics give evidence of constant care in the operation of all air transport lines. In the United States today—as there always has been in Canada, where aviation is making such signal progress in all its branches—there is a disinclination to start flying. The authorities rightly discourage such hazards being taken. Improvements in the design of airplanes, and constantly increasing engine efficiency, are making the machines more and more dependable. Consequently the art of flying becomes less dangerous. The degree of safety already attained is equal to that of other modes of transportation, and probably greater than that of automobiling, and who shall say that, ere long, individual possession of airplanes will not be so general that their common use may solve the problem of congestion created on the public highways by motor-car traffic?"

COUNCIL SALARIES



Toronto council's recent salary decision is one that is certain to provoke a great deal of discussion. The Hamilton Spectator does not think that the mayor of Toronto is being overpaid when he receives in all $11,500 per year, and that aldermen are getting too much at $1,200 in a city like Toronto if they are worth their salt. The Spectator says:

"The one book on which criticism can be hung is that the council members voted themselves the increases, instead of submitting the question to the ratepayers. In many cases a certain knowledge, however, that the public would turn thumbs down on such a proposal, this being an old Canadian custom. There are those who pine for the days when men who offered themselves as candidates for municipal office were actuated only by a desire to be of service to their community. Those were the good old days, however, when municipal government was not the big business that it is today. The mayors of those times were not held down to their mayoral desks all day and most of the night, as are present encumbents, nor did those old-time civic servants have to sacrifice their private businesses to meet the demands of administrative responsibilities.

ATTRACTION OF OCCULT

Why is it that anything mysterious has an appeal? If it is a novel of a mystery character it is an unexplained sound, immediately there is guessing as to the cause while inwardly a number of people have "creeps" when they think of these unexplained happenings. Not long ago in Hamilton telephone bells were ringing throughout a section of the city due to an electrical derangement, and the other night a frozen bell which had lost its weight of ice in Kingston harbor started to toll.

The first thought seems to be mystery. The human make-up delights in thinking of the occult. This attraction is the result of some associations in the past of some hidden fears in regard to surroundings. In the dark and dim past of the race man doubtless walked fearfully in a world he little understood, in a world of forces which he could not fathom, and which has not yet been completely explained. Hence the vestige of the attraction of the occult in modern days. One fears a black cat's crossing of his path, and so on. This is almost too deep for reason to combat.

SIDELIGHTS

THE CROCUS'S SOLILOQUY

Down in my solitude under the snow,
Where nothing cheerful can reach me,
Here, without light, see how I grow,
I'll trust to Nature to teach me.

I will not despair, nor be idle, nor frown,
Locked in so gloomy a dwelling;
My leaves shall run up, and my roots shall run down,
While the bud in my bosom is swelling.

Soon as the frost will get out of my bed,
From this cold dungeon to free me,
Up will I peer with my bright little head;
All will be joyful to see me.

Then from my heart will young petals diverge,
As rays of the sun from their focus;
From the darkness of earth will emerge,
A happy and beautiful Crocus.

Gayly arrayed in my yellow and green,
When to their view I have risen,
Will they not wonder how one so serene
Came from so dismal a prison

Many, perhaps, from so simple a flower
This little lesson may borrow—
Patient today through its gloomiest hour,
We come out the brighter tomorrow.

JOURNALISM RAW AND ROUGH is still practised in parts of the south where personal journalism is still in vogue. The mayor of Yazoo City, Mississippi, shot the editor, tried to kill the village dentist and, when he failed, committed suicide in the undertaker's establishment. Some one has said that in the olden days the weekly newspaper used to come out at a certain time and was a signal for assault and battery of a more or less virulent type. By comparison Belleville journalism is progressive plug pong.

Dogs Released After 3 Months In Quarantine

Happy Throng of Canines Subjected Council to Verbal Barrage

Stirling, Ont., April 12 (Special by Staff Reporter)—There was much happy barking and renewing of acquaintances on the streets of Stirling yesterday, for the ban on dogs had been lifted that morning, and after three months of being tied up or shut up, the dogs of the village were allowed to run at large again.

A happy throng of canines gathered on the main corner of the town to apparently discuss the action of the Council in ordering them tied up for so long a period, but so gratified were the most of them, that although it has been called a protest meeting at the start, it soon ended with the whole pack running off to explore the odd garbage can and to visit again the haunts which they had foreibly been kept from for the past three months.

All the dogs in Stirling village, Rawdon Tp. Sidney Tp. and Murray Tp. were ordered tied up three months ago when the rabies were so prevalent in Rawdon and Murray it is understood that the ban has not yet been lifted.

DISPUTE UNSETTLED

Shefield, April 13—The Employers Council has rejected the terms offered by the National Association of Unions in the textile trade whereby it was hoped that a stoppage might be averted in the Yorkshire wool industry. The workers' proposal was for a wages' reduction of approximately 5 percent instead of approximately 9 per cent recommended by the Government arbitrator.

As the disastrous effects which the stoppage would have are obvious it is hoped that further efforts will be made to bridge the gap. The dispute affects more than 1300 firms and about 140,000 operatives.

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Dear Readers:

With so much in the way of colour from which to choose it's difficult to select what you really want for spring. There are the greens soft and lovely, the blues, bright and cheery, there are reds over which one must be wary for these are the hues many have to avoid, and then of course, there is the ever smart black which is really at the head of the list, this season.

Perhaps you will choose a tweed suit, in a tempting shade. This is a splendid medium, allowing many colour schemes. If you select a coat of green or blue, you are limited in the choice of dresses you can wear with it. With a tweed coat, you may decide to wear a green frock. Your hat then, should match your frock. Be sure that it is not a few shades "off colour." The result is disastrous when you remove your coat. Some people seem to forget how many occasions arise when hat and frock combinations are more important than coat and hat, although all should blend. The new prints make it possible to repeat the original colour scheme with delightful variations in a frock of this type, and so you can add a frock of prints in which green that matches your hat is a motif. If it is one of the smart jacket dresses, you have a double date for that state out as an afternoon affair, and ends up, when you remove the jacket as a charming sleeveless frock.

The choice of accessories requires care. You will want a green bag, and a scarf perhaps. Here, too, care must be taken that colour tones match. Discordant notes, from adding a yellow green to a blue green costume, are to be avoided at all costs. Better no scarf at all, than one which is at war with your hat.

Gloves and hosiery that match are correct and definite the chin point in the well dressed. Gloves have come back to the cuff. They are worn in short styles with coats, and grow long er for drowns. Novel dresses, when coats are no longer necessary, require gloves that come up about six inches from the wrist. Evening dresses have gloves above the elbow, when one wish to be very formal.

If you have any problems about your frocks and clothes, the reader, won't you write in and take advantage of our service. We will love to be of help to you.

Fashionably yours.

LUCILLE.

WEDDINGS

LANGDON—WADE

One of the most interesting weddings of spring was conducted in St. Paul's Anglican Church, when Mary Gertrude, only daughter of the late Dr. R. J. Wade and Mrs. Wade of Brighton, Ont., and granddaughter of the late Hon. H. H. Wade, became the bride of Mr. Charles Vaughlan Langdon of Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Langdon, Rev. Canon Cody officiated and Mr. Crawford played the wedding music. Garden flowers and lovers and palms banking the altar made the pretty church beautiful. The bride who was given in marriage by her cousin, Mr. Frank L. Webb, K.C., looked radiant in her picturesque gown of bridal satin, with petals of Alencon lace. Her bridal veil of soft tulle was caught with orange blossoms, and her flowers were lilies of the valley and maiden-hair fern.

RANEY—SOLOMON

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Smith, Chudleigh Avenue, Toronto, the marriage was solemnized on Wednesday evening of Gladys Irene, daughter of Mrs. Solomon and the late Mr. George Drewdry Solomon of Brighton, to Mr. Norman Alexander Raney, son of the Hon. the Justice Raney and Mrs. Raney of Forest Hill Village. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. George C. Pidgeon of Bloor Street United Church. Mr. Malcolm Smith played the wedding music, and accompanied Mrs. Neville Filling, who sang "Because." The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, Frederick W. Solomon of Hamilton, was charming in a gown of eggshell satin. Her veil of tulle and Chantilly lace was arranged in cap effect and was caught with orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a silver and crystal necklace, the gift of the groom. For her bouquet was of Butterfly roses and lily of the valley. Miss Adelaide Solomon was her sister's bridesmaid, and Miss Jean Raney, sister of the groom, carrying a shower bouquet of Premier roses. Mr. James Orr attended the bridegroom. Following the ceremony a reception was held, Mrs. Solomon and Mr. Justice Raney and Mrs. Raney receiving with the bridal couple. Mr. and Mrs. Raney left on a motor trip, and on their return will reside at Brighton.

STORY BOOKS

Up summer, in the sunlight,
The open air is best,
And playthings are neglected,
And stories have a rest.
But when the dreary winter comes,
With foggy days and rain,
The heartiving and fire's bookshelves call
Their patrons back again.
O there for All Baba
O then for Jackanapes,
For Alice in Wonderland,
And Tarzan of the Apes;
For Little Claus and Little Men,
For Friday and Leper,
For Hereward and for Hercules,
For Treasure Island and Swedes.
—E. V. Lucas, in "Playtime and Company."

The bright warm days do try to lure you away from the armchair and a fascinating book but with the new books that have recently arrived, and the delightful gossip publishers are giving us about the books still to be published this season, the charms of reading are sufficiently strong to withstand the onslaughts of Springtime.

If you are looking around for a book that is unusual in its beauty and appeal, a rest from modern plots, do read "The Woman of Andros" by Thornton, and acclaimed by many the best book by Thornton Wilder. This short novel is based upon the theme of the Andria, a comedy by Terence. The woman of Andros is Chrysis, a Greek betaira, who has established herself on the island of Brynos and gathered about her the young men of the neighborhood, charming them all by her beauty and wisdom. The story turns on The love of Pamphilus, son of a merchant of the island, for Glycerium and the lasting of that love through bereavement.

The striking beauty of style, keen insight and sympathy shown in the handling of the subject point to the genius of that young writer, and he has sense of the poetical. "The Woman of Andros" is well worth reading for it stirs the heart, not by dash and clever but by the quality of its restraint.

To the amazement of its publishers "The Woman of Andros" became a "best-seller" from the moment it came from the press. It led all sales during its first week upon the market, which was not so surprising as the fact that in its second week it practically doubled its first week's sales. A short book, and too classic in tone to appeal to the great mass of readers, the publishers thought, but it was soon found that there are thousands of people who enjoy dignity and beauty. It is still a best seller, and causes other books to enjoy that position in recent years, it deserves it.

—Penelope.

SOME ONE

So one came knocking
At my wee small door;
Some one came knocking
I'm sure—sure—sure;
I listened, I opened,
I looked to left and right,
But naught there was a stirring
In the still, dark night.
Only the busy beetle
Tap-tapping in the wall,
Only from the forest
The screech-owl's call.
Only the cricket, whistling
While the dewdrops fall.
So I know not who came knocking
At all, at all, at all.

INSTALLING "THE TALKIES"

HANDING TAFFETA A BOUQUET

Fabric designers are throwing bouquets to spring silk fabrics. Moires and taffetas are blooming even before the violets this spring and patterning gay flowers in profusion on grounds of black and navy blue. They are coming right into the daylight with their new, smart sartorial gestures and both plain and informal evening functions.

This moire frock sketched here today thinks of spring in terms of green that is slightly more yellow in tone than jade. Attention is drawn to the importance of short sleeves by an interesting treatment of narrow bands with the idea repeated on the open work neckline. Narrow tucks indicate the normal waistline on the frock that follows the latest development of the silhouette. Anyone would turn green to have such a frock.

Perhaps You've Heard

All that Jane Austen received for her book, "Pride and Prejudice", was 116 pounds. This fact is contained in a letter written by Jane Austen to her friend, Martha Loyd, which will be sold by auction at Sotheby's on April 17. The letter reads "P. an P." is sold Egerton gives me 110 pounds for it. I would rather have had 150 pounds, but we could not both be pleased, and I am not at all surprised that he should not chose to hazard so much—The money is to be paid at the end of the twelvemonth."

The discovery was announced in Calcutta of an illuminated manuscript of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam of a date so early as to prove conclusively that it was the Exat and not the West that produced the first illuminated ed copy of the poem. The manuscript comprises 306 quatrains and was made in 1505—only forty-six years after the invention of printing in Medieval Library in Oxford. It was transcribed by the Sultan Ali of Meshhed and finely illustrated with miniatures.

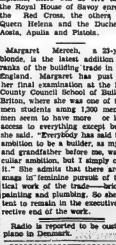
Among these present were representatives of all Spanish cities and twenty South American newspaper men, to whom Senor D'Berenger said the termination of Spain's attempts at colonization in South America had started an era of better feeling toward Spain.



While her husband wrestles with tons and guns, Mrs. Henry C. Stimson gives her attention to the printer's measure and other things made famous by the crossword puzzlers.

Intimate friends of theirs said today that Mrs. Stimson is in the luggage of the Simsons as they chang ed from their ry homes in the Hills to their country home at Stanmore and back were a copy of the proceedings of the London Naval Conference and a volume of cross-word puzzles.

Princess Marie Jose of Piedmont, Belgian bride of the heir to the Italian throne, has been made Colonel in the Royal House of Savoy enrolled in the Italian army. She succeeds Queen Helena and the Duchesses of Aosta, Apulia and Pistois.

Margaret Mercch, a 23-year-old blonde, is the latest addition to the ranks of the building trade in London England. Margaret has just passed her final examination at the London County Council School of Building at Brixton, where she was one of two women students among 1,200 men. "Women seem to have more or less free access to everything except building," she said. "Everybody has said that my ambition to be a builder, as my father and grandfather before me, was a peculiar ambition, but I simply can't see it." She admits that there are a few snags in feminine pursuits of the practical work of the trade—bricklaying, plastering and plumbing. So she is content to remain in the executive and direction end of the work.

Radio is reported to be dusting the plane in Denmark.

KINGSTON LOOKS FOR REVIVAL IN BALL INTEREST

Present Plans For Intermediate Baseball League

2 KINGSTON TEAMS

Napanee and Gananoque in Intermediate—Senior Ball Planned

Kingston, April 12—If present plans are carried out an intermediate baseball league for this section of Eastern Ontario will be formed shortly, with Kingston having two teams in operation.

The plans call for a four team league with two teams from Kingston playing with Napanee and Gananoque. It is probable that the Canadian Locomotive Company will have one of the local teams, while a prominent local baseballer is organizing the other team.

Baseball looks to be in for a revival in these parts, with the 21st Battalion club operating the C.O.B.L. team again. In all probability Kingston Belleville, Peterboro and Cobourg will form the loop this year.

STUDY CAUSE OF WAR

Regina, Sask., April 12—At the 39th biennial convention of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada a resolution was passed that the W.I.s during the coming year study the cause of war, that the members may be prepared to support Canada's efforts to further peaceful relationships throughout the world. The national president Mrs. W. F. Cameron, of Davidson, Sask., was a member of a delegation that waited on Premier Anderson and Commissioner Hutt, of Saskatchewan recently, to discuss the revision of the school curriculum and school text books. They asked to have the stories of glorification of war eliminated from revised text books and replaced by stories of great and good deeds of world progress, or industrial and humanitarian advancement; to replace cadet training and to have a copy of Kellogg Peace Pact displayed on the walls of school rooms. Premier Anderson gave the delegation an attentive hearing and announced that a review along the lines indicated was projected in regard to the readers. He promised further careful consideration to these matters.

Kellogg's, the foremost and best of all asthma remedies, stands upon a reputation gained in the hearts of thousand who have known its benefit.

Seek Release of Hockey Player

Petition In Circulation Only a Few Days—Signed By Three Hundred

Stirling, Ont., April 12 (Special by Staff Reporter)—A petition is being circulated in Stirling at present making a plea for the release of Fred Ingram, who was sentenced to serve one year in jail at the Spring Assizes here following the death of Albert Pearce, of Corbyville, who was killed while riding in a buggy which was struck by a car driven by Fred Ingram. The petition, which although only in circulation a few days has been signed by over three hundred people, bases its plea for mercy on the previous good conduct of the lad and his otherwise good character. It is expected that the petition will be brought to Belleville where Ingram is well known through his connection with the Stirling Hockey team.

SOMERVILLE WON WITH EXTRA HOLE

Will Oppose Homans in Final of North and South Tournament

Pinehurst, N.C., April 12—C. Ross Somerville, of London, Ont., Canadian champion and Eugene Homans, of Englewood, N.J., played spectacular golf to stroke their way to the final round of the North and South amateur tournament.

Somerville produced every trick in his bag to beat George Voigt, the defending champion, with a birdie on the 19th hole. Homans had less difficulty in winning from James T. Hunter of North Adams, Mass., 4 and 2. Both matches were played brilliantly in assortment of birdies and eagles brightening the drab par figures.

Somerville is one of the best amateur golfers in Canada, holder of the sprinter championship in 1928 and 1929 and runner-up in 1924 and 1926 and Voigt is considering one of the leading amateurs in the United States.

FLA GSALUTE

Truro, N.S., April 12—Nova Scotia W.I. used the flag salute at the opening of their recent convention and recommends this as an opening ceremony for Institute meetings. If a flag is unfurled and W.I. members wish faces turned to it repeat—"In purity, fidelity, truth, we pledge our allegiance to our king, our country and our flag."

INVITE PRESIDENT

Calgary, Alta., April 12—The Alberta Womens' Institutes have invited the national president, Mrs. W. F. Cameron of Davidson, Saskatchewan, to 22 a guest at their convention which is to be held in Calgary, May 20 to 23.

In the Ladies' Afternoon game yesterday the Smiles and Trys with Mrs. Hutchon bar ng a regular, held day, took three points to the Arenas one, who also rolled a nice game. High bowlers were Mrs. Hitchon with 622 for the Smiling bunch and Mrs. Cann'ng with 640 for the Arenas.

The bowlers' grind doubles are nearly finished and we are only awaiting Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra bowling to complete same.

The playoff in the ladies' league between Pringles, first place team and Steele Stores, second place team resulted in a decisive win for the Pringles who took the league champ onship. Steele Stores are second place prize winners. Some fine single were as follows: Fee Burke 175, 170, M. Graham 182, Phil Burke 243, C. Simmons 183, 185, L. Colden 193, M. Murphy 177.

SALACIOUS MAGAZINES

Charlottetown, P.E.I., April 12 — Prince Edward Island Women's Institutes are asking the Dominion Government to keep a more careful watch than ever on te books, papers and magazines circulated on the news stands, as many of these are of a salacious character and detrimental to the morals and upbuilding of both old and young.

FIGHTING AFTER ALL

Washington, April 12—Hipolito Irigoyen, Argentina's 82-year-old eccentric president yesterday reversed himself and talked with President Hoover over the new rad o-telephone system now in operation, between the two Americas.

GIRL UNAFRAID

Cecile's marriage had an odd effect upon Jeanette. She became more restless. More acrimonious of tongue, sharper of eye than ever.

Now that the prettier and younger sister was married, Jeanette felt the role of the family old maid settling down upon her. Cecile in the part of the feted and popular belle had been distasteful to the jealous Jeanette. But Cecile as an established young matron filling her sister with a helpless malice which threatened to ruin her digestion.

As though she suspected this—and took delight in goading her, Cecile was down as the Smokerie more often than ever. Laughing with gay indulgence at Jeanette's sour observations. Gossiping over the tea cups with the other frequenters of the shop. Murmuring darling sophisterie with Cyril Underhill while her sharp little teeth glistened between her orange lips.

The fire; time Cecile had come to The Caprice was for her marriage. Adeth fell her heart contract, as though a hot hand squeezed it. She let her lower lip until the pain brought her back to herself.

Had she imagined it—or had Cecile flung her a swift sidewise look of contemptuous triumph, as she walked by into the Smokerie. Ardeth was grateful for the hesitation of the slim woman she was waiting upon.

Cecile rather ostentatiously went into mourning for Ken's mother. She knew the expensive black crepes and chiffons lent pretty emphasis to her milky oval of face, to the Naples yellow of her hair. It gave a touch of distinction to her rather insipid beauty, a fact appreciably noticed by Cyril Underhill.

"You are a peculiar siren today," he murmured, his black eyes brushing her face in bold caress. "A beautiful bad spirit. You are la belle dame sans merci."

The long grey eyes narrowed and Cecile's thin orange lips curled enticingly. "Don't worry is one quality you do not crave, Cyril—"

As Lucy collected ash trays saw the look which passed between them and the little maid's standing eyes were normal. Not that did Chinese brides behave.

Christmas came upon Ardeth like a chill surprise. In her unhappiness she had forgotten all Christmas. She told herself drearily that it did not matter. She had not one to make Chris mas happy for.... Yet the day before the washed past the brightly colored shops she had suddenly turned in one and made her way to the top department. She picked out a gaudy dressed doll for Pan. A catcher's mask and baseball bat for Paul. She ordered them sent to the Fell street flat.

The New Durant—"6-14"

THE new Durant 6-14 has such striking APPEARANCE and is so apparently a COMFORTABLE car that it only requires a test of its PERFORMANCE for one to fully realize its VALUE.

Admiration for its appearance is accounted for by its attractive colors and general design . . . a low-built car with long, flowing lines and spear-point decorative theme throughout. Large doors, wide seats, deep cushions and a surplus of interior roominess immediately suggest a new standard of riding comfort.

The merits of the new motor are best appreciated when the 6-14 is in actual road performance. After you have seen this new car, ask your dealer to give you a demonstration in order that you may judge its new riding and driving qualities for yourself.

OBITUARY

MRS. F. C. WEAVER

The death of Mrs. Irene Shimer Weaver, 41 year old wife of Dr. Frank C. Weaver, well known dentist of Lockport, N.Y., occurred on Saturday, April 5th. Dr. Weaver is a Brighton County boy, his home having been just west of the village of Stirling, and he obtained his High School education at the Stirling High School. He has since distinguished himself in his profession, and has been with his wife prominent in church activities as well as in many community philanthropic enterprises.

Mrs. Weaver was an indefatigable worker for the good and betterment of the community. She was the superintendent of the primary department of the Sunday school of the First Emanuel church of Lockport, N.Y., a member of the Women's Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. and of the board of directoresses of the Y.M.C.A. having been chairman of the industrial group of the latter, a member of the Board of Locust Haven and the chairman of the last "roll call" of the Red Cross Chapter.

She was a woman of charm and culture and greatly devoted to her home. Her death comes as a great loss and bereavement to her husband and to her father who also lived with them. To Dr. Weaver, friends here who remember him so well, extend kindest sympathy and most earnest prayer.

Among those from this district who attended the funeral were D. A. Weaver, cousin, of Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. George Weaver, of Stirling, a brother, Mrs. F. Vandervoort, a sister, of Stirling, Mr. Annie Bailey, of Stirling, a sister, and two nephews, Arthur Weaver, of Stirling, and Gordon Bailey, also of Stirling.

Tweed Driver Fined In Court

Frank Foster Said He Fell Asleep At Wheel of Motor

Trenton, Ont., April 12 (Special by Staff Reporter) — Frank Foster of Tweed, claimed that he fell asleep while driving his motor car at Trenton the other night, but it certainly proved to be an expensive snooze. Yesterday afternoon he pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving before Magistrate Ponsford in police court, and was fined ten dollars and costs. In addition, he paid forty dollars for breaking off an iron electric light pole. At that, he saved thirty dollars on the pole by having it welded together, instead of buying a new one, which costs seventy dollars. Fred H. Downing, a traveller, of Toronto was speeding well over the regulation thirty-five miles per hour when overhauled by K. T. O. Pytnik. He paid ten and costs in the same court.

The art of brewing has now been traced back to 7,000 B.C., when brewing was a common occupation of the peoples of the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates.

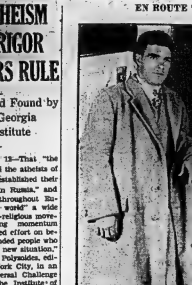
SOVIET ATHEISM LAID TO RIGOR OF TSARS RULE

Menace to World Found by Speaker at Georgia Political Institute

Atlanta, Ga., April 12—That "the enemies of religion and the atheists of the whole world have established their official headquarters in Russia," and that "we are facing throughout Europe and the civilized world" a wide and more sinister anti-religious movement, which is gaining momentum and calls for a concerted effort on behalf of all religious-minded people who feel the danger of this new situation," was declared by A. Th. Polyzoides, editor of Atlantis, New York City, in an address on "The Universal Challenge of Religion," before the Institute of Citizenship, being held here at Emory University on the second evening of the session which is to continue for the week.

Working hand in hand with the Communistic regime, the anti-religious movement in Russia owes some of its success of its atheistic campaign to the fact that in the last 12 years religion of all types and sects has lost much of its hold upon the Russian people, Mr. Polyzoides said.



That the state religion in Russia was one of the means whereby the people were oppressed, exploited and kept in ignorance for 1000 years ever since Russia became a Christian country and more especially in the last 200 years when the Tsar became the official head of the church, gave the people a score to settle with their church, advantage of it, he declared.

"The question arises," he said "how long will it be before we see the atheist missionaries invading every country and preaching the overthrow of every religion? This is something into which we must look very carefully before it is too late. The only way to counteract atheistic propaganda is by reorganizing our entire church organization, by encouraging the union of all religious people in a solid front whose aim it will be to uphold religious education as a safeguard of our common civilization. Clergymen of all denominations should get together and fortify our youth against the attacks of the atheist," he concluded.

Mr. Polyzoides is also conducting a series of round tables on "The Outstanding Problems of Europe Today." In the first of these he stated that the preponderant factor in Europe today in almost every country is fear and hatred and every genuine spirit of peace with a greater realization of the futility of war as an instrument of national policy. He warned, however, against overoptimism and said that alongside the forces for peace and understanding among peoples one will always find the old irreconcilables who will not so readily part with methods of the past.

Among others conducting round table discussions on the opening day were Dr. Sam. Small on "Georgia's Immediate Problems," and Miss Roberta Hodgson on "County Government in Georgia."

YELLOW LILY IS FOUND AT LAST

Thought Lost for Years; Another "Blue Rose" Case

The director of Shaw's Garden, St. Louis, Dr. George T. Moore, a few days ago announced that at last he had solved one of the most fascinating mysteries of the plant world by proving as a reality the legend of the "lost yellow lily" and producing the long-sought flower. He considers the discovery an achievement comparable to the finding of a blue rose. The New York Sun says the history of the search for this mysterious member of the lily family began forty years ago when a German botanist, Herr Stuhlmann, wrote of finding a previously unknown lily in the heart of Africa. That was the only record of the plant since 1890 until Dr. Moore's discovery and the only specimen known to civilization was a dried flower which Stuhlmann sent to the Berlin Herbarium the year he made his discovery.

This record and the dried flower constituted the only clues with which Dr. Moore started his search. He came upon one of Stuhlmann's books in which was scrawled a marginal note locating the lost lily in "a swamp near Malongare railway station, Kilometer 731." The forester of that district reported: "I cannot find a record of the plant having been found in this colony." Dr. Moore wrote to Sir Northrup McMillan of Nairobi, a naturalist of considerable attainment, with the comment that no map which he had consulted threw any light on the locality and that he was very much afraid "it is some cursed German designation that doesn't mean anything to any one else." A friend of Sir Northrup's later sent from South Africa a package of bulbs, but they were found "not to be even lily bulbs."

Another package which was sent by the same person was opened by the Horticultural Board, which reported the "bulbs so badly decayed that they were destroyed." Dr. Moore set as a task for every big-game hunter who went to Africa a search for the lost lily. Finally, when he "was on the verge of doubting that there ever was a yellow lily," Dr. Moore, as a forlorn hope, wrote to the Amani Institute in Tanganyika citing the significant marginal note in Stuhlmann's book. In a few months he received a package including a hundred or more seed, from which plants are now growing in Shaw's Garden. The sender of the package, Dr. Burtt, botanist at Kondo Irangi, says that the yellow lily is a "true Nymphaea, with no resemblance to lotus or astelia, and having spectacular primose flowers, eight inches in diameter, and sweet scented" Dr. Moore sees in the rediscovery of the lost lily the creation of a whole new series in color combinations.

This NEW GILLETTE BLADE and RAZOR is reinforced against hard knocks

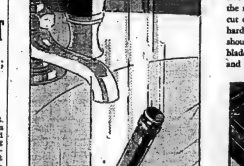
HOW many times have you dropped your old Gillette on wash-bowl or floor? More than once, probably. Usually no harm was done, but not always. Sometimes, after such an accident the blade "pulled."

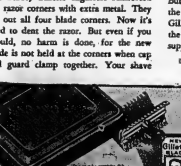
Gillette engineers, in seeking the cause of "razor pull," questioned thousands of Gillette owners and examined tens of thousands of old Gillette razors. Practically every razor that "pulled" had been dropped. The corners of the guard were dented. Not much . . . but a Gillette Razor is a precision instrument. Even a microscopic dent was enough to throw out the adjustment, to cause "razor pull."



In designing the New Gillette Razor and Blade, Gillette engineers reinforced the razor corners with extra metal. They cut out all four blade ears. Now it's hard to dent the razor. But even if you should, no harm is done, for the new blade is not held at the corners when cap and guard clamp together. Your shave remains perfect, no matter how much this razor is dropped.

That's one great improvement. There are many more in this new shaving tool. The New Blade is made of steel which has been specially processed to resist rust. No more cut towels. No more tedious wiping of razor parts. A simple twist of the fingers turns the guard at right angles. Then retighten and hold under hot running water. Shake thoroughly. Lay on the shelf. That's all the drying you do.

Gone are the old center posts. You'll never nick another blade on them.



We are making every effort to keep up with the demand for the new razor. We hope you will not have to wait for yours. But if by chance you should, you can use the New Gillette Blade in your old Gillette Razor for the time being. Visit the nearest Gillette dealer today before his supply gets low.

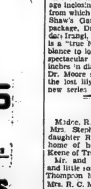
ST. LOUIS VIEWS INITIAL UNIT IN $25,000,000 PLAN

Civil Courts Building 380 Feet High, Expected to be Ready in July

ST. LOUIS — The city of Pierre Laclede has bade an unaffectionate farewell at scores of antiquated stores, pawnshops, penny arcades and lunchrooms along down-town Market St. From that ruins are rising noble structures of semi-classic and modern-istic patterns which are working a transformation of the district as St. Louis's extensive new civic center gradually assumes shape.

Contemplated improvements in the district involve about $25,500,000.

Nearing completion at Market St. and Twelfth Boulevard and comprising the easterly end of the Memorial Plaza, the Civil Courts Building rears its pyramid-shaped head skyward for 380 feet, higher by five feet than the Southwestern Bell Telephone Building. Here previously the tallest in the city, its Bedford stone walls are surmounted by a superstructure of classical columns, making this outpost of justice one of the most striking buildings in St. Louis today.



The 27 chambers in the courts building for the circuit, probate and appellate courts are finished in walnut and the offices and corridors in oak. The St. Louis Law Library has been assigned quarters in the building. The courts are expected to note their first session there in June or July.

WARNING TO MOTHERS

Watch the Health of Your Little Ones At All Times

No mother can expect that her child will escape all the ills to which babyhood and childhood are subject, but she can do much to lessen the severity of these troubles. The mother should be constantly on her guard to prevent children's ailments, or if they come on suddenly as they usually do, to have the means at hand to relieve them. Thousands of mothers have found Baby's Own Tablets the ideal remedy for little ones—thousands of mothers always keep the Tablets in the house as a safeguard against the sudden illness of their little ones. Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers and make the cutting of teeth easy. They are sold by Mrs. Chapman, Luke 24, first 12 verses. Hymn 308. Minutes were read and approved. Letters of correspondence were read by Mrs. Lott. FOREST FIRES WREAK HAVOC IN 1929

Ottawa, Ont., April 12—The forest fire situation in Canada during 1929 was one of the most severe ever experienced and might easily have been the most disastrous in history but for the intensive development of fire fighting methods.

Canadian forests extending between Western Ontario and the Pacific Coast were chiefly affected by fire. Some 8,-686 fires were reported during last year. With the exception of 1922 this is the largest number of fires for any year on record. The loss is estimated at 98,-272,485; 8,726,749 acres, of which two-thirds was non-forested, were destroyed.

Much greater disasters would undoubtedly have been recorded but for the efficient work of large fighting crews which toiled for weeks and sometimes months at a time to prevent monstrous conflagrations. The cost of suppression alone is estimated at $978,000 This sum does not represent the total cost of protection but merely the cost of actual fire fighting.

As unparalleled condition of extreme drought throughout Western Canada is responsible for the frequency and the furor of the year's fires.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

"We aren't going to stay very late," Cass suggested persuasively.

"Finish this up—and leave me wash the dishes" Mrs. O'Hara said, of a lemon pudding, Golden and hot, she scraped the last spoonful from the dish to the sticky mold, and Cass accepted it gladly.

The smudgy west gloomily braided with storm. Outside they could hear the wind crying, and the irresolute splatter of spring rain.

"You don't have to go that. Mary Kate," said her mother.

"I'm just starting them." She had polished a big apron over her dress, as was at the dishpan. "Come on letting me everything. 'Come on, Regina!' she urged. "Bring me everything; hurry up, Regina."

Tom had come down from upstairs he joined near her.

"I took the fifty cents you owed me, Mary Kate!" he said in a few tone.

"Oh, all right!" But she didn't feel that it was quite all right. Tom was a big, hulking figure but after all he was only seventeen, he was much too young to be always dawdling along Fill more street at night drifting in and out of moving picture houses, and cigar stores, and candy stores. He ought to be studying—of course, this was Friday night—

"Go with the girls and me to a pitcher, Tom!" his mother, who had been watching him without seeming to in the least aware of him, said carelessly.

His homely, half-sullen and half-wistful face brightened. But as Regina and Tom both said instantly, "I sit next to Mother!" and little Pat added a loud "No I sit next to Mother!" his expression darkened again.

"I won't be late," he said gruffly, unconvincingly.

"I wish—" his mother began irresolutely, and stopped.

"If anyone asks you, I don't think much of Petey Kerry!" Mary Kate said.

Tom's ugliest look came into his face. "You don't have to run with him!" he reminded her lightly and lovely, with a faint emphasis on the first word.

"I thank God for that!" Mary Kate said promptly.

Stop-that Head Aching

Zutoo

"Now stop it, the both of you!" Mrs. O'Hara directed them sharply.

"Petey Kerry's a lot older than you are Tom," Cass said, unable to leave Mary Kate undefended. Tom gave him a resentful look as he left the kitchen, pulling on his cap as he went.

There was an instant's blank pause, and Mary Kate glanced swiftly, apprehensively, at her mother. But Mrs. O'Hara was buttoning on Pat's coat, with expert, motherly fingers, jerking it into snugness around his neck and the spectacles with a kiss on the fresh little hair face she framed in both her big hands. Then she went to put on her own coat the heavy black coat with the draggled strip of fur at the collar, and her widow's bonnet with its dingy veil.

Returning to the kitchen she found everything in order; Mary Kate had drawn the table back against the wall, the sink was empty and spotless, the chairs in line.

A little battle of departure, a discussion of keys and hours, and lights and locks set in. Mary Kate said:

"Aw, sit down here, and let me love you!"

Mrs. O'Hara obediently taking the lower one's nineteen-year-old daughter climbed into her lap. Mary Kate locked her arms about her mother's neck and pressed her transparent ivory and apricot cheek against the older woman's still firm and rosy face.

"Oh, Ma, you're darling!" said Mary Kate, looking sideways at Cass looking, with a smile that challenged him to criticize this performance. "Do you know you're a saint, Ma?" she asked, arranging the disorderee bonnet with great nicety.

"I know I'm nothing of the kind—lock out the door, Regina, and see is it rainin'" the mother said patiently. "If mother go; they want to get to bolder the crowd." Martin suggested, lifting the library of a pipe and the evening newspaper, beside the stove.

Cass knew, waiting his girl with great approval. He had been orphaned as a little boy; he loved all this evidence of family affection, the scrambled meals at the O'Hara's house were his idea of felicity, with the children supplying amusement, the comfort of the fine older brother everyone's charge, the loving, busy, scolding mother superintending everything and his glorious red-headed, white skinned tall girl making them laugh, making them serious, entertaining them, criticizing them, gently bedevilling and enslaving them all.

CHAPTER III

Cass Keating's affair with Mary Kate was at the delicious point when everything was understood and nothing definite. They thought of each other all the time every word was significant, every glance. Sometimes they talked indirectly of marriage, of what "anyone" could do on forty dollars a week, of what "anyone" would have to pay as rent for two rooms, or three rooms.

They have been inseparable for more than three months. Gradually Mary Kate's other beaus had dropped away; gradually the exiles had cleared. Cass's Aunt Lizzie had died, leaving fifteen hundred dollars for funeral expenses and for Cass. Even after very handsome bequests there had been several hundred left—a nestegg for house furnishings. Then, after March first, Cass was free in his "fields"—which meant a commission on every side of real estate, on every lease, on every dollar's worth of insurance.

"I'll bet I'm averaging three hundred dollars this time next year!" Cass predicted.

"Oh, act your age," urged Mary Kate

"Well, whadder you wanter bet?" Cass was a typical hard young Irishman, handsome blue-eyed, lean-faced and shrewd. He knew that he was smart, and that some day the world would know it. "Listen, I've been up again it, taking care of our interests and paying off my father's doctor bills, and all that," Cass would say. "But listen—if I don't gamble, do I? I don't run around with any neighborhood gang, mixing cocktails and rolling the bones, do I? I tell you I can't lose!"

"You're a marvel. I'm going to write your life, Cass Keating, Brains, or How Cass Keating Got the Job!"

This in the beginning, when Cass had brought her home from dances, and taken her to picnics in Mill Valley. But of late Mary Kate had been taking Cass, and life, a little more serious ly. He had been joining the family freely regularly for Sunday dinner, and he had often come in informally during the week, for the past six months. And at Christmas time he had helped trim the children's tree, and had gone to midnight Mass with the O'Haras.

Mary Kate could not remember anyone ever doing that before. Any outsider in the pew with mother and herself, and Mart and Tom and the girls, and little awed and blinking Pat. The cold dark starry night outside, the big church warm and scented with incense and evergreens, the strains of the solemn Noel and the triumphant shout of the Adeste had sobered her strangely this year.

That was the way it began, was it? A wedding—wifehood—motherhood, as wrapped up in the presence of each affectionate, alert man in the brown overcoat, who was breathing hard with emotion and religious ardor as he knelt beside her in the family pew. It was going to be Cash Keating, was it—Mary Catherine Keating—now that had a nice sound. Mrs. Keating and the kids, at ten. Mr. and Mrs. Keating going home to Christmas dinner with her folks. In her tan coat with the fur collar, and from under her little brown hat, Mary Kate had smiled at him, during the midnight service, and Cass' glancing smile in return fluttered her pulses, whenever she remembered it.

In the weeks since Christmas that graver mood had deepened and intensified between them, all the silly giddiness and gayety of their early friendship had vanished. Cass had gotten the habit lately of taking her into intimate friendly question almost martial in their sweetness.

"Is that cool going to be heavy enough, dear? . . . Did the sanitin work, Mary Kate, did you get off to sleep? . . . What happened when Tess told Sister Immaculate what she had done? . . . I'm worried about you, dear, you're hungry, and tired Mary Kate, and want to go have some fried oysters with me?"

In a few weeks or days some time—there was no hurry, they would tell the others—they would be engaged. Meanwhile, they walked on air.

Tonight, when Mrs. O'Hara and the three younger children had gone, and Mary Kate and Cass and Martin found themselves alone in the kitchen, an interval of peace suddenly descended.

Martin put aside his paper, and, Mary Kate, who seemed unable, Cass noted with a sort of jealous pleasure, to keep her hands off the persons she loved went over to sit precariously balanced, on the arm of his chair, with his own arm braced about her slender waist. She rested a white, well-groomed hand on her brother's dark hair, sometimes ruffling it idly and once or twice looking at the rich mop thoughtfully, before stopping to kiss it, .

Cass sat at the table, smoking a cigarette, and looking at the brother and sister.

"I thought you people were going to a dance?"

"We are," Mary Kate answered indifferently. "But it's only Lermann's the regular Friday night Mart, why don't you come? Dolores is going to be there."

"Dolcrs!—ha!" Mart echoed, taking his pipe out of his mouth for a brief cynical laugh.

"If you ask me, she likes you," Mary Kate said.

"Well, I don't ask you," Mart assured her good-naturedly.

"Mart, what have you got against Dolores?"

"Nothing!" Mart stirred restlessly, sighed. "Now, I'll tell you what it is, Regina, Tom and Mother," he added significantly.

Mary Kate looked serious, at this and a sympathetic shadow fell upon Cass Keating's face.

"They have to eat," Martin explained simply.

"Mother has her sense," Mary Kate offered unhappily.

"Well, of course. But just at the moment — "Martin countered with a shrug. He put his pipe back in his mouth.

They were all silent for a minute, and they could hear the rain beginning again, soft and plushy, against the windows, and the soft restless move ments of the spring animals in the dark night.

But in the kitchen everything was a warm and bright —low warm and bright indeed to make it easy for Mary Kate to feel any particular enthusiasm for a dance, or Martin for his library work.

"There's my hundred," Mary Kate said suddenly.

"Oh, you!" her brother jeered affectionately. "You'll want to get married, some day. No," he added more seriously, as the other two exchanged a quick, self-conscious glance, and the girl's transparent skin flushed richly, "No, if I had the right to leave home now—and if I had a few hundred to have with Mother for emergencies—"

He was thinking aloud, spacing his words deliberately, as he fitted them to his thoughts. He paused, .

"I'd not bother Dolores Boyle," he resumed suddenly. So Mary Kate and Cass regarded him in silence, wondering what was coming. "I've got some plan in order to do him that!"

"Oh, what, Mart!" Mary Kate exclaimed rather than asked.

"Doc-van Antwerp wants me to go to Germany with him," Martin admitted impatiently.

The enormity of it made the kitchen, still, silence. Cass and Mary Kate stared at the speaker with widened eyes and parted lips. The rain pattered—the clock—pattered suddenly the door rattling gently, Pat's big gray cat made a flying, velvety leap from the floor, and alighted on Cass' knee. He stroked it absently, his troubled glance not leaving Mart's suddenly flushed and excited face.

"Martin Joseph O'Hara!" whispered Mary Kate then.

"Yes—of course I can't do it," Martin said, with a gruff careless laugh "I told him right away that it was impossible—"

A moment's pause. Then Mary Kate said incredulously!

"You said you couldn't! Martin, say you're crazy!"

"No, I'm not crazy—"

Instantly both were scarlet and angry.

"Well, you are and you make me wild—"

"Why should I make you wild? If anyone's going to go wild, it ought to be me, having to turn down a chance like that—"

"But you don't have to turn it down, you poor sap! Listen—"

"Now listen yourself, (Mary Kate) I'm the one that knows whether—"

"Oh, you don't know anything of the sort!"

She was bending back at arm's-length now glaring at him. Both their faces were red; their voices high.

"If you think I'd have any satisfaction running around Berlin—"

"Oh, satisfaction!" She was up from the arm of the chair, frantically pacing the room. "I call it dishonest!" she said passionately, "I call it actually dishonest to pretend that Mother and the children and I couldn't get along perfectly well without you! You're not a slave! You have to have your chance—"

CHAPTER IV

"If you'd just calm down, and let me explain—" Martin began.

"I don't want you to explain. All I know is that you have refused an offer that any other man in medical college would simply jump at—a chance to go to Berlin with old van Antwerp—"

"Oh shut up, you give me a pain!" said Martin rudely.

Cass, so far, had been a concerned but not alarmed witness. Now he said sacrificially, with all the dignity of his 21 sixty-seven years.

"What's the proposition, Mart?"

"Well," said Martin, eager to talk about it in spite of himself, "Doc is going to do a year's staff work at a Berlin hospital—one of the best, I guess. He says he'd only want me about three mornings a week, to take clinics there, and of course to drive him around, week-ends and I could do our second year's work in the rest of the time— easy."

"Speak German?" Cass asked, scowling and considering.

"Oh, like a native!" Mary Kate explained. Both men laughed. "Well, Mart, you have studied it for years!" she added, accusatively, her cheeks reddening.

"I've had to, driving old van Antwero around." Mart explained. "I guess I could make out," he admitted

LATEST METAL FOUND TWICE AS HEAVY AS LEAD

Metallic Uranium Cost $400 a Pound—Useful in X-ray Work

ATLANTA — The age of machines and metals has a new natural scientific toy, metallic uranium, at $400 a pound.

It was announced to the American Chemical Society, April 9, in the discovery of a new method to produce this hitherto priceless, steel grey metal, one of the 92 elements of earth, and the heaviest in atomic weight.

The discovery brings the metallic form within reach of experimenting to increase its uses, now confined mostly to measuring ultraviolet light and to X-ray work. Heretofore it has been made in small quantities in laboratory "bombs."

The new method is electrical and was reported by Dr. F. H. Driggs, research chemist of the Westinghouse Lamp Company. He said the major part of the expense is in preparation of the green salts from which the metal is obtained. The first stage produces a gray powder, which is pounded into molds and pressed into a metallic substance somewhat resembling tungsten.

The metal is virtually explosive in this stage Dr. Driggs said if left exposed to the air for a few seconds it burns like flashlight powder, except at a somewhat slower rate. It is reduced to true metal in a vacuum furnace in which the fusing heat is produced by electrical induction.

Samples of it made into wire and metal sheet about twice as heavy as the same volume of lead were exhibited to the convention. They were dark brown dust, Dr. Driggs said, to the blinding effect of oxygen in the air, which is much slower on the metal than in the explosive powder stage, and only skin deep. When this brown surface was scraped, the bright metal underneath began immediately to tarnish. Uranium is sensitive to invisible ultraviolet light, but not to visible rays, Dr. Driggs said.

A salt of uranium in 1896 through its then mysterious "light" spotted a photographic plate in the dark for Prof. Henri Becquerel of Paris. This event led the Curies to the discovery of radium. The "light" in Becquerel's dark room proved to be the radio-activity in the uranium salt.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—condition it's always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be in everyday use. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

"And this is a chance, is it, Mart?"

"Oh, my God, Cass! It's being picked out of the ranks. Why I could get a scholarship easy, if I had a year in Glenmore with van Antwerp," Mart said.

Suddenly he chilled, fell silent. His voice, when he spoke again, was flat. "But of course it can't be done!" he said simply.

Mary Kate's indignant, expectant eyes moved to Cass's face; Cass dared not fail her.

"How much money would it mean, Mart?"

"Why, pay all my expenses, and a small salary too."

"No, but I mean—here?"

"Oh! Oh, yes. Well, I'd say a thou and," Mart said magnificently. "I'd write Mother to draw about fifty every month—that's six hundred. And then the rest for emergencies."

Mary Kate returned to the arm of her brother's chair, and put her arm about his neck, kissing him firmly on the temple. She fixed a look of utter confidence upon Cass Keating.

"Now, Mister," said Mary Kate gaily, she said positively. "Isn't he, Cass?" she said.

"I think he ought to," Cass decided hesitatingly.

"Well, you'll have to take it out thinking," Martin said. Yet he was pleased by their interest.

"I could raise a thousand—" Cass mused aloud.

"Forget it!" Martin said, with an air of finality.

"Oh, but Mart—Mart—" Mary Kate wailed "it might mean your whole life!"

"It won't."

"Not tonight't ever get another chance like this!"

"I will."

"I can't bear it," she said rebellious ly, out of a silence.

"There's nothing to bear," Mart said in a tone of annoyance. "It's not the first thing we've had to give up—look at Mother. Why, she practically sacrifices her life, cooking and slaving—"

"Yes, but that's different, Mart. When it's your children!"

"I don't see it." Mart closed his eyes, and rubbed his head gently up and down against Mary Kate's shoulder as she leaned against him.

"Cass, don't you think it's different, when it's your own children?"

"Anything I say to be used against me?" Cass asked, with his clean flash of white teeth in a dark face.

"Cass, stop it!" Mary Kate reproached him.

"Ma isn't going to know one word of this," Mart said suddenly.

"No. I suppose not." There was a silence. "D'you suppose we'll always be poor?" the girl asked then, dreamily.

"No!" the men said emphatically, together.

"They all laughed. Cass, as a matter of fact, had never thought of money at all, until of late, when he actively and anxiously wanted to marry Mary Kate O'Hara. But Martin and Mary Kate were intimately acquainted with their mother's prosling ho- den had been theirs, since actual child hood.

All their friends were poor, were rather shabby, ravenous, eager house holds of growing young persons like themselves, or quiet little threadbare widows with flat purses, middle-aged school teachers painfully anxious about a prominent old age, emaciated spinsters who carried on their own enterprises—boarding houses, dusty little millinery shops, music "studios."

The girls Mary Kate knew were like herself, ambitious, spirited girls who left high school to plunge into unremunerative work, picking up such proficiency in stenography, bookkeeping, shorthand and kindred subjects as their opportunities afforded. The boys had all escaped early from "just your grammar" or "first year high;" they were a grubby ungreened lot, ranging, all the way from salents to pirates, fighting their way through ignorance, and past their own ambitions, to present-ly emerge as average husband and fathers, average citizens in a world of low average.

Mart was an exception, of course, by reason of his having finished "high" of his unusual intelligence, and of his ambition. And Cass was another exception. One felt that Cass was going to do wonderful things—make more money anyway than Mart would. Mart—Mart rather wanted to serve the world, do something for unfortunate sick folk. But Cass expected the world to serve him, and serve him it would, soon or later. Whether he would go in to politics, some day, or gamble in stocks, or take some big chance in real estate, Mary Kate never speculated. But she vaguely knew that he would do something like that, and do it well. Mart stirred in her deep admiration and loyalty. But Cass, so handsome and poised and sorceful and sure of himself, was exciting.

Tonight marked a real turning-point in her life, and she was conscious of it, as she sat here in the warm, shabby orderly kitchen. Listening to the soft spatter and rush of the March rain, leaning against darling old Mart, who had been her prop and stay since baby-hood and smiling at Cass Keating, who was presently going to set her to many him. Mary Kate felt safe, and happy and beloved.

"I thought you people were going to a dance!" Mart sair heavily, when the clock over the sink said nine. Mary Kate departed to dress, and he drawled himself to the entry, dragged on his overcoat still damp from after noon rain, and finally stumped sleepily away, yawning and dull, for an hour in the medical library.

Cass combed his hair at the sink, and straightened his tie, and in exactly fifteen minutes a tall girl in a shabby, dark-blue taffeta dress came downstairs. Her face was flushed, her slim body was outlined by the plainly fitting frock; her arms and her innocent throat and chest were bare; her hair was brushed into silky flame above her white, babyish forehead. There was a liquid sapphire glitter in her eyes.

This was her hour. She knew it the moment she stepped into the kitchen. She trempled as the dark boy got to his feet, and came over to her, and quite simply put his arms about her. Cass might be poised and scornful and aware of himself sometimes. But not now!

Now he was shaking and incoherent. And incredulous. He could not believe that any girl as wonderful as Mary Kate could really want to belong to him—live in the simple little home he could make for her—care that his coffee was hot and big chair comfortable.

"Mary Kate, you mean that we'll—we'll get married?" he kept saying over and over again, with unsteady laughter.

"Well, believe me, Cass Keating, if you and I are going to keep house in one of those new apartments in McAllister Street—we'll be married!"

And then gales of laughter, and the whole thing to be said all over again.

"No, but you do like me, don't you, Mary Kate?"

"I think I do."

"Oh, darling, you know that you do—you're interested—you're in love—"

"No, just tell me this, dear. You have not liked anyone this much before, have you? Just tell me that."

CHAPTER V

The dance was forgotten. They were together in the big chair like Tristan and "Mother's rocky" ever since Mary Kate could remember anything at all; all the lights except one were out, in the kitchen. The windowpanes looked black, and the rain crawled and twinkled on them.

Mary Kate did not have to speak much. She rested contentedly in her man's arms, her soft cheek against his. Cass did all the talking.

Listen, they ought to tell everyone right away. And listen, they ought to plan to get married right after Easter. And listen, he was going to stay on with the O'Connor Own-Your-Own Coal Company for just two more years and then it was going to borrow capital and start in fr himself. And listen, there was no reason why they should live in town, if she would prefer Berkely, San Mateo or any other suburb.

But no, Mary Kate wanted to be near her mother! All right then. But listen—

Every little while she gave a little wriggle of excitement and pleasure. This occurred when she thought of all the "fun" ahead; that fun of which she had lost sight in the excitement of discovering herself really upon the eve of an actual engagement.

But there would be house-hunting to do—oh, fun. And then her name would be charged of course—she would be Mary Kate Keating. Fun. And the girls in the office would all crowd around to see her ring—oh yes, and she'd have a ring! And some day she would have a square little sturdy boy with his tummy belted into a clean, stiff romper, and a little pink girl baby in a gray persambulator, with snowy blankets and bables embroidered cover, and elderdown all round her pink cap—

"Listen, dear. You could manage on that?"

"Oh, Cass! We can have company dinners. I'll ask Ma how she lries chicken—"

"Mary Kate, don't die till some of this comes true!"

More laughter. Then presently they were off all over again.

"I said to Jim Cane, 'No, the girl with the red hair—'"

"That was at Kitty's party."

"Yes, and I hadn't wanted to go!"

"I had on an old white rag. I was sort of in mourning for Uncle Miles." She giggled. "I remember that when I bought those slippers I told the clerk I wanted deep, deep mourning, but with a dancing heel!"

"You're a case—" Cass told her, adoringly.

There was only one cloud.

DOG DRAGGED ON HIGHWAY ALONG BACK OF AN AUTO

Offense Occurred on Port Hope-Peterboro Road

Port Hope, April 13.—Having dragged a dog behind their swift-moving car by a rope for miles until the animal's yelps of anguish became silent, two boys then threw the dog into the ditch for dead, Dr. Thomas Johnston, officer of the Peterboro Humane Society, said in relating what he termed 'the worst case of cruelty in his experience."

Dr. Johnston and Provincial Constable Chisholm investigated this case on April 4, and warrants will be sworn out in Port Hope by Dr. Johnston for the boy's arrest on a charge of extreme cruelty to animals.

According to Dr. Johnston, the boys, Fred Davis and Leigh Hewitt, of Fraser ville, have signed a statement, confessing to the act. In their statement they admit, Dr. Johnston said, to having tied the dog behind their car and dragged it for several miles south of Fraserville along the pavement of the Port Hope highway until they thought the dog was dead. Then he said, they threw the dog in the ditch, thinking it was dead.

Later the animal recovered consciousness and crept back to the store at Fraserville. Dr. Johnston and Constable Chisholm were called and Chisholm shot the dog to put it out of misery, Dr. Johnston stated.

"The poor animal's hair and hide was torn off, and in places the flesh was laid bare to the bone," Dr. Johnston said describing the effect of the treatment upon the dog. "It was suffering terribly."

"I intend to prosecute this thing to its full extent," he said. "We swore out warrants in Peterboro, but later found they could not be served because this thing was done in South Monaghan, which is in Northumberland County, and the warrants must be secured from the Magistrate in Port Hope.

WILL CONSIDER GRANT TO MINER

Both Premier King and Hon. Mr. Bennett Reply to Mr. Turner

Requests for the continuation of a grant of $5000.00 to Jack Miner, the Kingsville bird lover and keeper of the finest sanctuary on the American continent, have been pouring in from all parts of the Dominion to the Prime Minister, the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Hon. R. B. Bennett, leader of the Opposition and members of Parliament. This grant was given last year and Mr. Miner thought it was to be annual but the Parliament states it was for only one year. All these requests have asked that the grants be made annually to Mr. Miner. Mr. Walter Turner, keeper of the sanctuary in this city and president of the Hastings branch sent his telegram to both the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition and replies were received from each today. Prime Minister Mackenzie King wrote through his secretary Harry Baldwin.

"Dear Walter Turner:

"I am directed by the Prime Minister to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 4th of April in which you endorse Mr. Jack Miner's request of $5,000 in aid of his bird sanctuary.

"Mr. King asks me to let you know he has brought your representations to the immediate attention of the Minister of Marine and he trusts that they will receive every consideration."

The letter received personally from Hon. R. B. Bennett was as follows:

"Dear Mr. Turner:

"I have your telegram of the 4th instant urging a continuation of the grant to Jack Miner.

"I supported the grant last session and having had an opportunity during the recess to visit the bird sanctuary I am glaqdly in accord with the suggestion you make.

"Yours faithfully,

"(Sgd.) R. B. Bennett."

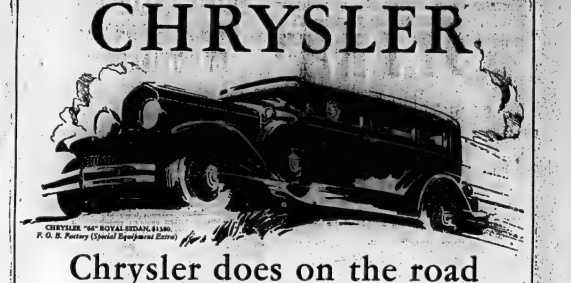
GROWERS TAKE COMPLAINT TO PREMIER KING

Colborne, April 12.—A complaint has been been forwarded to Premier Mackenzie's King by R. E. Coyle, prominent fruit grower of Colborne in connection with the alleged destruction of some 900 barrels of apples by United States prohibition authorities at Black Rock, N.Y.

According to Mr. Coyle, he shipped the fruit to Ridgeway, Penn., a few weeks ago. At Black Rock the shipment was seized by prohibition officers and opened. The apples were emptied on the floor, the fruit grower says, and damaged. No trace of liquor was found in the barrels.

"I have been unable to get any satisfaction out of the United States customs authorities," he said. "They offered no apologies for the destruction of the apples and practically refused to discuss the matter when I went to Buffalo to confer with them.



"They considered they were doing their duty and that was all I could get out of them," he declared. They said they had the authority to open whatever they liked."

Chrysler does on the road what others do on paper

ONE RIDE in a Chrysler quickly clears up all confusing claims about motor cars.

The dictionary is everybody's property. Words are free. On paper it is a common thing to see motor car performance referred to as "dashing" and "amazing" and "thrilling"—but a ride in a Chrysler quickly proves that Chrysler performance is the real thing.

Don't take your ride on paper—but on the road. Get behind the wheel of a new Chrysler and let the car supply its own adjectives. Let a Chrysler show you the vast difference there is between merely claiming fine performance and actually having it.

It's the unmatchable quality of Chrysler performance—it's the fact that Chrysler does on the road what others do on paper that keeps Chrysler firmly in its leadership. Don't let high-sounding adjectives mislead you.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AFTER MARRIAGE

by

Jasper B. Sinclair

Copyright, 1929, International Feature Service, Inc.

"Can't you let that pipe of yours alone once in a while, Jack?"

"Jack fumbling looked up at his wife, the pipe poised, in midair, while he reached for his tobacco pouch.

"Can't you let that pipe of yours alone one cin a while, Jack?"

In his own home?" he captured quietly.

"Of course," retorted Millie. "But that pipe is never out of your mouth."

"Oh, well!" he hesitated and then laid it down again. He shrugged resignedly, picked up his book and resumed reading.

"And that book!"

"Well, what's the matter with it? It's a perfectly good book. Recommended by the —"

Millie brushed aside his banter with a gesture.

"Jack, why can't you be like other men?" she questioned. "You come home night, flop yourself in the chair and do nothing but read and smoke. Never think of talking to me any more than you used to, or taking me to a movie. Don't you think that—"

"Humph! I didn't marry you to go to movies with all the time!"

"Apparently not. If that's the way you feel about it, why—why— I think perhaps—" Millie hesitated doubtfully. "Then!"

"I think maybe you and I had better—"

"Oh!" Jack nodded his understanding. "I think so, too! I've had about enough of this!"

He laid the book down, rose to his feet and left the room. In a few minutes he was back, carrying a suitcase and wearing his hat and coat.

"If you want to reach me any time I'll be over at the club. And—I'll tell you a check every week. You can stay down until—"

Millie nodded. The tears were very close to the surface at that moment. She had never seen him so grim and tense. She would have spoken but—

The front door slammed shut and she could hear him running down the steps outside.

"Sure comfortable, here!" Jack murmured, settling himself in an easy chair in a corner of his club. He puffed reflectively on his pipe, eyeing the glowing fire opposite.

"No more nagging!" That was it. Millie's continual nagging and desire to be on the move grated on his nerves. Dances, movies, parties — Jack cared little for such diversions. Once in a while was all right of course but not, every night in the week. A man was entitled to some rest in his own home.

It would be tough on Millie, of course, but then it was her own fault. He leaned back contentedly and picked up his book.

After a hard day's work there was nothing like the solitude of the club, a pipeful of tobacco and a good book. No more chasing around—no movies, no more mixing of rank cock tails. A life of solid comfort loomed ahead.

Then came a morning, scarcely two weeks later when Jack steps later than usual. When he had finished shaving, a hasty search revealed no clean collars.

"Darn that laundry! Late again, now if I were—" he paused, frowning at his own reflection in the mirror.

"Oh, well, I can buy one downstairs if the store is open."

Fortunately for his peace of mind it was.

The next morning he discovered that some buttons were missing from his last clean shirt.

A pair of socks that needed darning were thrown into the wastebasket. Of course Millie would say that was wasteful. But then, Millie wasn't here, so that part didn't matter.

Petty little things, but they roused grave doubts in Jack's mind regarding the future. Little things that were readily magnified into serious trouble.

Another week passed; thus, with the trifling annoyances that made a man realize just how helpless and incompetent he is in some respects.

Even the food in the club grill became distasteful. Too much seasoning, or not enough. Nothing cooked the way he was used to it.

"I wonder what's getting into me?" Jack muttered, as he wandered into the library, leaving his meal untouched.

"Must be my stomach." But he knew it was not.

Then he proceeded to fill his pipe, drew a match across the book, picked up a book and opened it.

When he realized that the printed lines were a meaningless blur he threw the book impatiently aside. It was by his favorite author, but he had suddenly lost interest in him.

His pipe went out. Staring into the ruddy fireglow, he forgot that it was clenched between his teeth.

He pulled out his watch. Seven-thirty. It is still early.

"I wonder—well, no matter! I think I'll go for a walk."

It was strange that his feet should carry him away from the downtown section, out to a certain tree-lined street.

Stranger still that he should pause before a certain gate on that tree-lined street. A light was burning in the front room. He hesitated an instant then pushed the gate open.

He was not conscious of ringing the bell, but the door opened from within.

Perhaps he had rung it, or his wife might have seen him coming up the steps.

"Hello Millie, how would you like to go to a movie tonight?" Rather vaguely he heard himself voice the query.

There was no surprise in Millie's attitude. She took his presence at the door step as a matter of fact. It was as though he had just returned from an evening stroll.

"Just fine, Jack," she declared, "but I thought—that is—"

He smiled happily.

"A book is read and a pipe goes out, Millie," he began, but you—"

"Oh!" she interrupted quietly. "I won't be more than a minute, Jack. And, Jack,' she called from the hall, 'lets go to a movie where you can smoke."

ALTER COMPLEXION OF RUSTIC VILLAGE

STRATFORD, Conn., April 11 — Named for Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford's English complexion is fading before Russian influences.

The sikrsky aviation corporation, numbering many royalists emgres among its 1,000 employees, has transformed the village into a counterpart of the old-country.

A "fire-hook shelf" of books printed in Russian has been added to the public library with representations of the works of Andriev, Chekov, Maxim Gorky, Krasnoff and others.

The Russian Orthodox established this year under authority of the archbishop of the Orthodox Russian church, serves the new citizens in their foster land.

The telephone directory, long favored with English names alone, nearas the influx with strange names — Obliareff, Sinitzin,' Petroff, Sergievsky, Digeff, Tolstoy, Tretovsky, Toonkoof, Koodroff, and others.

Igor Sikorsky, president of the corporation, pioneered in aviation in Russia. In 1919 he came to the United States and since has become an American citizen.

BILLION DOLLAR MERGER IS WON BY BETHLEHEM

Court Refuses to Enjoin Voting of 51,038 Youngstown Shares

YOUNGSTOWN, O. — Unless blocked by some new court fight, the $1,000,000,000 merger of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company with the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, on April 9 became a certainty in proponents said.

This supposedly deadly although in the bitter struggle between many of the industry's greatest captains, ended in common pleas court when Judge C. S. Turnbaugh refused to enjoin the voting of a block of 51,038 Sheet and Tube shares for the merger.

Shortly before Judge Turnbaugh's decision was given, spokesmen for Cyrus S. Eaton, leader of the anti-merger group, decided that the merger had a majority, declaring results of the vote could not be determined until all had been counted. He believed, however, that the merger fight hinged on Judge Turnbaugh's decision.

Stockholders of the Youngstown Co. cast their ballots April 8. The terms on which Judge Turnbaugh ruled was counted in favour of the merger and Attorney L. A. Mackenzie, special counsel for Sheet and Tube, said the total vote, when the count is complete would show 800,000 votes for the merger. Only approximately 791,000 were needed to approve it.

All Youngstown was in commotion as the result of the battle, based on Judge Turnbaugh's decision, was announced, marking what proponents of the merger said was the most spectacular battle of the steel industry in two decades.

WOMEN LIVE SHORTER LIVES

NEW YORK, April 11—Dorothy G. Wiehl of the Milbank Memorial Fund's research staff, announces that federal census bureau figures show American women now have less chance of living to old age than women had ten years ago, although women have better chances of reaching three-score-and-ten than men have. Miss Wiehl's report is based on a study of deaths among adults from 1921 to 1927 and says statistics of "period eight causes" were responsible for from 65 to 85 per cent of all deaths in the United States after the age of 50. These are tuberculosis, heart disease, cancer, diabetes, pneumonia, hemorrhage and apoplexy, pneumonia nephritis and accidents.

Miss Wiehl said lower death rates among babies and from infectious diseases had increased the average length of life, but that death was taking an increasing toll among people in the prime of life and after middle age.

"Striking changes in the death rates among men and women of different ages occurred in the last quarter of a period," said Miss Wiehl. "At every age the change is more favorable for females than for males and is particularly true for the ages of middle life. In the age group 35 to 44, the death rate for males in 1927 showed an increase of 12.5 per cent. over the 1921 mortality, as against a decrease in the female death rate of 4 per cent. At ages 45 to 54 the increase for males was 13.5 per cent. compared with an increase of 2.5 per cent for females. At the upper ages there is a more favorable course in the female death rate was observed. In the age group 55 to 74, the increase in deaths of men exceeded that of women by 330 per 100,000. The death toll for men exceeded the death toll for women in each of the seven studied, except diabetes."

There are 20,000,000 telephones in the United States. A total investment of more than $4,000,000 is required to operate them.

RUSSIANS DEFY MOSCOW ORDERS

LONDON — Unusual problems have arisen here owing to some 20 citizens of the Soviet Union having been ordered by the Moscow Government to return to Russia and having refused to obey.

Most of them are former members of the Soviet trade delegation to London, who have taken up other employment upon being replaced by young Communists sent from Russia. Notice has been given them by the Russian Consul-General in London of severe penalties, including confiscation of property and even execution, to which they render themselves liable in Russia by failing to return within the time limit given them, which expires Friday.

The Daily Herald, Government organ, understands that an endeavour is being made by the Soviet Embassy to have them extradited, but the Minister understand that this is unlikely to succeed in the absence of any Anglo-Russian extradition treaty. Meanwhile the question is canvassed as to whether it is possible for them to have their position regularized by obtaining League of Nations passports such as those already issued to exiled and fugitive Russians who have not become subjects of other states.

NEW TAXES WILL BE LEVIED SAYS SNOWDEN BUDGET

Beer Duty Raised Seventy-Five Cents Per Barrel

(Canadian Press)

LONDON, April 14.—Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer presented his eagerly awaited Labor budget today. He estimated expenditures for 1930-31 at about $3,909,000,-000 and revenue for year on the existing basis of taxation at $3,698,000,000. Thus the difference he had to make good was about $211,000,000. The chancellor, in course of his speech, indicated he did not anticipate a general election this year, saying he had not found it necessary to provide in this financial year for such expenses. He informed the Commons that safeguarding duties would be allowed to expire as their fixed date, not to be renewed.

LONDON, April 14.—Pensures of the Snowden budget were:

Safeguarding duties on key industries will be allowed to expire. Betting tax is abolished . Other duties are retained.

Income tax increased by twelve cents; death duties increased from forty to fifty per cent on estate of more than ten million dollars; surtax on incomes. Increase of 75 cents a barrel in beer duty.

Changes in motor license fees—all cars to pay about $20 instead of thirty three million dollars.

Reduction of $57,000,000 in carrying charges on debt.

With new taxation, revenue estimated at $3,909,000,000, yielding a total plus of possibly eleven million dollars.

Snowden declared there would be no election this year. He forecast legislation to prevent the evasion of tax payments on estates through private companies; to tax non-residents earning incomes.

Total deadweight debt £7,469,000, reduction of £31,000,000, total floating debt £737,000,000, reduction of £100,000,-000, now at the lowest figure since the war.

Deficit for past year £4,532,000; beer and spirits revenue decreased £3,200,-000.

PAUL CASIBO IS KILLED BY TRAIN EARLY SUNDAY

Body Thrown Some Distance On the Right of Way

TRAIN NOT SEEN

Paul Casibo, aged 20, was instantly killed yesterday morning, the result of being struck by a west bound freight tram on the C.P.R. near Sulphide. The young man was employed by the C.P.R. on an extra road gang and at the time of the fatality was going along the tracks to visit with a companion for the day. Apparently the man nor the engineer did not see each other and it is only a conjecture which way the man was walking at the time of death. His body was terribly mangled, it receiving the full impact of the iron locomotive. The body was thrown some distance under the right of way. Dr. Mather of Tweed coroner for that district, and Dr. Locks also of Tweed visited the scene and had the body removed to Tweed, where an inquest will be held tomorrow night. Provincial Constable Hill of Madoc also attended the scene and arranged for the empanelling of the 12 jury and carried out the investigation.

In conversation with Dr. Locke today, The Ontario Intelligencer was informed the man met instant death. Asked if there were any peculiar circumstances in connection with the fatality the physician did not state. Apparently it was a case of not seeing the train. The young man was born in Hungerford Township and had resided in the district all his life. He was an adherent of the United Church, and leaves to mourn his loss, his parents and six brothers.

LOCAL FLEET LEAVES FOR FISHING GROUNDS

Under an azure sky with a gentle following wind, the fishing fleet that has wintered all this week for the winter season set sail for the fishing banks today. The fleet was made up of three boats all owned by the Geyer Brothers and they will be located at Weller's Bay for the summer. Napoleon Geyer and Lawrence "Cully" Geyer, the hockey star from St. Louis, will fish together, while Archie Geyer will fish independently but live in the same camp. The principal catch is lake trout and the boys have been successful on these banks for some years. The boats, that set sail today, are all modern and have been overhauled for the sailing ship of other days and have been thoroughly overhauled during the winter and a coat of paint added. Fishing in the lake is a dangerous profession as every kind of weather is encountered but the healthful benefit cannot be measured. Gilly takes this means of keeping in condition for the hard grind of the winter and is always ready when the bell rings for the opening.

VILLAGE HARD HIT IF PAPER MILLS CLOSED

Unless officials of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills can see their way clear to continue operations at their Frankford branch, Frankford village will be hit hard by the decision to close the plant. One hundred and twenty-five men have been given notice that their services will no longer be required after May 15th. This number represents practically every employed man in the village with the exception of those few engaged in the operation and the Lehigh Cement Co. Mills operate plants at Montreal, Toronto, Campbellford and Frankford. The Campbellford plant closed its doors about one year ago.

There was some hope that the work on the Frankford-Trenton road would start this spring but latest indications are that the building of the highway will not commence until next year as the cost of laying the new artery was not including in the estimates for 1930. This would provide work for many of those out of employment following the closing of the mill. The Paper Company made a partial assignment following a trade depression.

Trenton, Ont., April 14 (Special by Staff Reporter)—The Saylor Block at the corner of Dundas street and Dundas here is undergoing extensive changes which will improve the looks of the corner street considerably. The block is divided into two parts, the one to the west being a fine storey building. This is being remodelled and will be made into two stores of modern brick and glass front is being built in while the interior will be finished with metallic ceiling and walls. In all, when completed the building will be a big improvement to Trenton's down town section.

Took a Dip In Quinte Waters

Trenton, April 14 (Special by Staff Reporter)—Although the balmy breezes of April 1st were warm and delightful, we have brought thoughts of summer and swimming to many in this district. It remained for Lee Anger, of this town, to be the first one in. He took a short dip in the ice water on the Trent River Saturday morning. Mr. Anger states it a point to be like the rest of the water in the fall and the first in the spring, and apparently he has not lost the latter home, if hener it be, another year at least. The bridge has only been out of the Trent River for about three weeks, and many enjoy the thrill of floating leward in the Bay of Quinte.

Insurance Men Rotary Guests

Underwriters Heard Splendid Address From S. S. Weaver

Trenton, April 14 (Special).—The regular meeting of the Life Underwriters Association consisting of Belleville, Trenton and surrounding district was held in private event, held at the Gilbert House, Trenton, Ont., Friday evening, April 11th.

The evening was made much more interesting by the fact that the Underwriters being the guests of the Trenton Rotary Club, made up a combined attendance of approximately sixty members after dinner the meeting was called to order by Rotarian Ralph Bonnell, who was the chairman of the evening and filled that position very ably. Community singing was the means of creating an enthusiastic atmosphere, conducted by Rotarian Lorne Foster, followed by a song from Rotarian George Colley.

Mayor Fraser of Trenton in welcoming the Underwriters on behalf of the town of Trenton eulogized the value of insurance men to the community by voicing his appreciation of the value of life insurance and its needs. He of life insurance and its needs. He stated, not only was life insurance the finest asset that a man could have for the safe guarding of the future existence of dependents, but was of financial value from the point of financing many other responsibilities to the world in general. This information coming from one of the highly respected citizens of Trenton also one of the most successful business men should be valuable to the underwriters.

The main speaker of the evening was S. S. Weaver of Toronto, one of the executives of the Continental Life Insurance Company. His address was no doubt one of the finest ever heard in the town of Trenton. The speaker directed quite evenly in his remarks the value of the Rotary Club of the Underwriters and the Life Underwriters as almost one fraternity, always doing good in their respective communities.

Mynor Reid of Belleville was the last speaker. He expressed his appreciation of the Rotary Club in entertaining the Underwriters and gave very interesting figures in the matter of life insurance in force in the City of Belleville and the Dominion of Canada. Life Underwriter Jack Silver rendered a solo and encore.

Great credit is due the Trenton Rotary Club men, and members of the Rotary Club for making the first meeting of this kind a success. It was the general opinion of those at the meeting that the next attendance will be aimed for at future meet'ngs of such nature. The next meeting has been open for items of discussion, after which it was adjourned.

ALL YOUR PANKERS TAGLESS DOGS HUNTS BEWARE THE! POLICE

All paved streets in the city will no longer be a garage for cars according to Police Chief Constables on their beats over the week-end were instructed to ask the number of cars parking on the streets all night and those found parked will be reported to Fenton, at the same time putting tickets on the cars, asking the owners to report at the station.

This morning many travellers and early risers were at the station early in certaining the reason of the ticket and were told that night parking was not allowed. The sweeper is unable to properly clean the streets if cars are parked on the street and the nuisance will have to be abolished. All offenders appearing today were warned either by the chief or desk sergeant but henceforth summonses will be issued and a fine imposed.

March 31st was the last day on which dog tax could be legally paid but the police have been reluctant in prosecuting those, who failed to comply. As a result of the growing number of cats and dogs in the city council, a complete check-up of the dog situation will be made and those owners not possessing the necessary tag will be summoned to court. All dog owners should attend to this matter as probably the life of a valuable dog will be snuffed out.

SHE SAW A DIFFERENCE AFTER FIRST FEW DOSES

New Brunswick Lady Tells Of Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. M. C. Belyea Suffered With a Very Lame Back

Brown's Plains, N. B. April 14 (Special) Another tribute to the great work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing for the women of Canada comes from Mrs. Fred C. Belyea, a well known resident of this place. She writes:—"I used Dodd's Kidney Pills for my back which was so lame I could hardly get around the house or do my work. I got some Dodd's Kidney Pills and after the first few doses I noticed a difference. I kept on taking them and when I had taken two boxes, I was quite well once again."

Other sufferers of backache tell of pains relieved and health restored through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They act directly on the kidneys. They strengthen the kidneys and put them in shape to strain-the uric acid out of the blood. They do one thing only, but they do that one thing well.

MAPLE SYRUP SPILLED

The labor of several days was spilled on the city street's Saturday afternoon. Mr. William Henderson, Marchbank, brought several gallons of maple syrup to the city for sale and was proceeding north on Station street intending to turn south on Pinnacle street, Mr. Henderson slowed up for a car ahead but the car following crashed on the city streets Saturday afternoon, damaging the tire carrier and fenders and spilling all of the maple syrup. The stolen investigated but an adjustment was made between the parties involved.

CARS MIRED ON ROADWAY

Those contemplating a trip to Stirling by the new road should ascertain the condition before attempting the journey. This road from Foxboro to the village limits of Stirling was completed but fall and it has not settled as yet. For some time the motorists have been using the new highway but yesterday the barriers were taken off and the traffic re-routed over the new road. The heavy traffic opened some of the holes due to frost coming out and many cars were mired. Last night at one time there were five cars mired in one hole and it required the services of a derrick from Stirling to remove them. It is likely that the barriers will be again put up until the road has completely settled. Those behind the cars mired had to back up a distance of nearly a mile before finding a place to turn around and then proceeded home by the detour of West Huntingdon.

PARTIAL ECLIPSE OF MOON

An exactly twenty-one minutes after midnight this morning, an eclipse of the moon took place. The eclipse began at exactly midnight when the moon entered into the long shadow of the earth. It continued farther and farther in that shadow until about one-ninth of it's face was hidden. This took about one o'clock when it slided onward and went out of the shadow at 25.5 minutes past one. Locally, it is doubtful if anyone watched the movements of Lady Moon. Most citizens were likely interested in deeper sleep unaware of the strange phenomenon.

FRANKFORD REEVE HURT

George Arnott, reeve of Frankford village, received a severe shaking-up and suffered bruises about the body when a team of horses which he was driving took fright and ran away hurling the driver to the ground. Mr. Arnott was hauling wood and when the team bolted down the road, the wagon struck a tree, capsizing the conveyance. The accident occurred opposite Mr. Arnott's home near the cemetery. When he was tossed out his back was hurt and he was carried to his home. He was resting much easier today.

LIBERAL SPEAKERS HERE

Liberals of Belleville district will gather in the city hall tonight to hear two political speakers, Mr. Harry Sifton, son of the late Sir Clifford Sifton, and Mrs. E. B. Penner, wife of Toronto Mayor Fraser, of Trenton, will appear on the platform as well as Liberals from Belleville including Mr. Charles Hanna, Mr. Harold Hollon and others.

CHAIN LETTER CRAZE

An epidemic of chain letters has again struck the city and several residents have been in receipt of the anonymous missives within the past week. The letters are written in the usual form, are alleged to have originated in Flanders, and promise illuck to the recipient if not re-mailed to another victim within four days. The instructions state that the letters must travel around the world four times. Some of the highly-amused persons who received messages, promptly placed them in an envelope, addressing them to Santa Claus at the North Pole or some other fictitious address.

RECEPTION SERVICE AT ROSSMORE

An interesting reception service was conducted yesterday afternoon in Ross Memorial Church by the pastor Rev. J. C. McMullen who preached from the text Acts 2, 47 "The Lord Added Unto the Church Daily Such as Were Being Saved." Mr. E. A. Ridley inaugurated the service by two well rendered solos entitled "Alone" and "I Want to Live a Christian 'n My Heart". At the close of the morning service the names of fourteen was welcomed into the church mostly from the Sunday School.

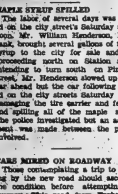
ORATORICAL CONTEST

Of unique interest to all, the annual oratorical contest to decide the best speaker in the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School will be held in the school auditorium on Wednesday evening, starting at eight o'clock sharp. A number of pupils have entered the contest and it should be keenly fought out. It is expected that a large crowd will be in attendance.

FELL INTO BAY

Jack Smith, popular weigh-master at the Ongow Coal Yards, Water St., has the doubtful honour of being the first citizen to take a dip in the frigid waters of the Bay of Quinte. While the cornea of a marine family was repairing a boat near the dock said that the craft tipped, he was tossed over the bulwark into the water. Fortunately friends were on hand and they assisted the victim to shore. It was a little wrong for his immersion and was not long in getting at home.

MOTORISTS MIRED ON HILLS



Motorists driving to Stirling yesterday found the roads rather treacherous near the Oak Hills. Several spots at the top of the hills have caved in and the ground yesterday is soft enough in navigating the dangerous places. Several motorists were stuck in the mire last night. The highway department have placed barriers at the holes today. Other than the few bad places on the hills, the road leading to the north-is in good shape.

FIRE AT POINT ANNE

A large frame house owned by the Canada Cement Company at Point Anne, and occupied by Mr. Harriell was completely destroyed by fire early Saturday. The cause of the fire was a defective chimney and the house went to great ashes before being discovered. Mr. Harriell with the help of neighbors removed practically all the furniture and his loss is fully covered by insurance. The home was also covered by insurance. by the owners.

GRASS FIRE

The fire department was called out at two o'clock this afternoon to extinguish a grass fire at the corner of East Bridge Street and Bleecker Ave. The fire lighters were on the job quickly and the blaze was easily extinguished. Fire Chief Lindsay has requested that special precautions be taken at this season of the year to fires of this nature as they often develop into stubborn blazes.

POLICE COURT

Coming to Belleville to "celebrate" cost two Indians, John Hill and Jacob Brant, a piece of change in police court today before Magistrate Masson. A constable arrested one two men on Front street early yesterday morning and escorted them to the police station. Both were charged with intoxication but on searching Brant, a part bottle of rye whiskey was found. Hill pleaded guilty to intoxication and was fined the usual, which was paid. Brant had a more severe penalty to face and he was assessed the minimum $100.00 and $7.00 costs or in default one month in the county jail. As Brant was not in possession of a permit he was asked where he procured the liquor and an answer like the answer of O.T.A. days was given, "I bought the liquor from a judge about a man with a moustache and would not know him again if I saw him." said Brant. Not a very clear hint, when not to raise the fine, while Brant was escorted to the cells below.

FOR HOME AND COUNTRY

Toronto, April 14 (CP)—"For Home and Country" is the motto of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada. This was originated by Mrs. Laura Rose Stephens, of Huntingdon, Quebec, the first organizer of Women's Institutes in Ontario, where they had their beginning 30 years ago. Mrs. Stephens is a dairy expert and both in her books and her talks on dairying has reached wide audiences. Since she founded the second Women's Institute she has never missed her annual six weeks' tour of the Ontario W. I.'s. "Home and Country" has been selected as the name of the magazine of the British W. I.'s also the provincial W. I. papers in Canada.

London, Eng., April 14. This sets forth the present day position of the country—women's associations of the world, and gives a good deal of space to the Women's Institute movement not only in Canada, but its growth overseas.

Detroit Scores Five Runs in Ninth to Grab the Rubber Game

WINNING RUN ON BALK

Detroit, April 14.—Steve O'Neill's Toronto league leafs finished prepara tion for the International League race by dropping the last exhibition game of their long schedule to the Detroit Tigers here Sunday. The score was 9 to 8. The Toronto team left after the game for Reading, Pa., where it begins the championship race Wednesday afternoon.

Vick, the recruit from Waterloo of the Mississippi Valley League, Kyle Graham, former Tiger, and Nicholas Harrison, another right-hander, pitched for the Leafs, Vick and Graham were effective and at the end of six innings Toronto had a 7 to 2 lead.

Harrison Did Well

Harrison did well enough for two to hitch, but collapsed in the ninth and permitted the Tigers to stage a five-run rally. On top of that, he committed a balk on which the winning score was made. Here is what happened in that decisive ninth:

Stone, leading off, drew a base on balls, but was forced at second on Charlie Gehringer's grounder to the box. Henry Greenberg, who has replaced Dale Alexander at first, scratched a single, pulling Gehringer on second. Both runners advanced when Hugh Wise, the Toronto catcher threw wide trying to catch Greenberg off first, and Harry Rice scored both with his fourth hit, a double that fell just out of reach of Arthur Ruble, the Toronto left fielder. Bill Akers, finishing the game at third for Marty McManus, followed with a single, scoring Rice, and went to third on George Westling's single. Ray Hayworth's single scored Jackson with the tying run, and Phil Page, last of Detroit's pitchers, filled the bases with another single, the sixth successive Tiger hit.

On The Sport Trail

Five weeks to the opening of the baseball season and fans are already ruminating on the prospects of the local, as well as the other teams which will all likelihood compose the Central Ontario League. The O.B.L. has grown from a lusty baby in 1919 to one of the most important links in the Ontario Amateur Baseball Association. Originally it was sponsored by "Jake" Solomon, loquacious Peterboro entrepreneur, and he convinced other moguls in Central Ontario of the obvious necessity of baseball as a tonic in order to put the great summer pastime on a basis with other sports.

Various changes have taken place since that time, many of the smaller towns succumbing under the constant dealings of the larger centres and the financial embarrassment which perpetually beset the path of those behind the clubs. Wholesale importations on the part of Peterboro, Oshawa, Belleville and Kingston forced the league to keep out admissions to smaller Leagues. Tremendous travelling expenses and the lack of sufficient material played havoc and Lindsay, Port Hope, Brockville, dropped out. Deloro finished a good team last year but an industrial depression in the northern metropolis brought on the prolonged announcement that the Smelters would not enter this year.

Deloro will be missed as they always put up snappy battle despite the fact that they were handicapped in more ways than one, and as the dominating personality of at the present time, the "Big Four", Belleville, Peterboro, Oshawa and Kingston will form the League. Last year Kingston was given a bye which was not available this year, victory to the supporters in the Limestone City and they are clammering for a regular berth this season. York hospital but the management made reasons to balk at the long trip to Kingston which necessitates the players' absence from work for at least one day. Belleville is ideally situated in the centre of the hub and the jumps are not so olng.

The three team League was tried once before and it did not function to the satisfaction of those concerned and it is to be hoped that any differences which now exist will be amicably settled.

The 21st Battalion Club of Kingston are behind the Limestone entry and the soldiers are keen to get in. From all appearances they can line up a fast team with a possible weakness in the pitching staff although the elongated Howard Reid showed flashes of form which stamp him as a potential pitcher of real ability. Smith another Kingston hurler can hold up his end at times and will be available while Jamieson is the third of the trio, and with this corps the Easterners will be fairly well fortified. Depue rumor has it that "Bube" Britton and Harry Batstone will line up with the 21st and there are few better ball players than this pair in Ontario. Batstone has lead the Bell Telephone team for the last two seasons but since the Toronto Industrial League is now defunct, the agile third baseman may remain with his old love, the Ponies. There are few better second baseman than Bob Elliott and the Queen's boy will likely be covering that position. "Lonny" Purvis is ready for duty at first base. There is a wealth of material for the outfield while Arnell can handle the catching duties.

Textiles have announced that they will take charge in Oshawa and the General Motors are seldom found napping when the "Dusps" announce the batteries on May 24th. Little is known of the actual composition of the Oshawa squad but "Tommy" Morrison, Young, Rowden, Bond and Sutton are still residing in the Motor metropolis.

The Raybestos Club are anxious to secure the franchise in Peterboro and with the talent they have to start with they should have little trouble in fielding a first class team. "Shiner" Johnston, Max Swanston, Hirpstan and a number of others have been the back-bone of the Peterboro Club but some of the veterans have decided to hang up their spangles and the destinies of the northerners may pass into new hands. Peterboro is blessed with a number of young players coming along and with a few older and steadier heads to steady the squad, they should present a powerful team. Peterboro baseball officials have believed in sponsoring Junior ball and there is always material to fill the shoes of the retiring older players.

Now for the local situation! Belleville has gained the cognomen, "Hotbed of Eastern Ontario baseball," and the Grand Trunks and later the Belleville Nationals have played so consistently from year to year that the city has earned the reputation of being one of the leading clubs in the Province. "Peggy" Hills, who still occupies the throne as the leading catcher in this part of the Province will do the back-stopping. Mills' bat has played havoc with pitchers on the circuit and consequently he is still capable of handling the old apple, a good'wide any time. Mills, the good wife says, has improved with age and he has many years of good ball left in his system yet.

Alex. Weir who has developed into a good pitcher should be even better than ever this season while Harold Ollmen who hung up a great record in 1926 is back here again while we are under the impression that "Tommy" Pelpter with the help of Mills has pitching potentialities which have not yet been brought to the surface.

Harry Mills played good ball last year and although he has been troubled with his eyes it does not impair his playing to any great effect. Vern Weir is slated for the second base job while Jack Reid will cover third. The Nationals have lost Harry Blakey who will enter as an interne in an Albany, New Murney Green, "Sunny" Green and Harold Buck are leading contenders for the outfield positions. After-gether that collection looks good enough to give any team in Central Ontario a real wrestle.

A meeting will be held shortly to start the ball rolling.

A reminder! May 15th is the closing date for the migration of hockey players and any who are thinking of a change of residence must do it before that time. A report from Port Colborne states that "Pat" Hextmer and Shannn will line up with the Sailors. This disputes the yarn that the two flashes from Niagara Falls will play with the National Sea Fleas of Toronto next year. Port Colborne despatches states that Neville of Hamilton Tigers will also play with that town. It's an impressive looking line-up at least.

Any dog in Kentucky accused of sheep killing will be entitled to a trial in court under new law.

WEST END JRS. IN TRACK TITLE

Score 68 Points to Win Decisively in Indoor Competition

Toronto, April 14.—In the outstanding Junior athletic meet of the indoor season held Saturday afternoon, the West End Y.M.C.A. carried off the honors and the Y.M.C.A. Ontario junior title. With the completing of the final event the W. E. team had piled up a total of 68 points. Central Y. collected 33 points, with Broadview and Orillia Y's getting 27 and 18 points respectively. West End Y won the under-20-year class and the under 18-year class and tied with Central Y for points in the under-16-year class. Competition was keen in every event, with 87 athletes competing.

In the under-20-year class points were fairly evenly distributed among the contestants with only six athletes winning two events. Mullins of Broad view Y. and Bradley of West End Y. each collected eight points to tie for high man. Elston's jump of 9 ft. 6¼ in. in the broad was exceptionally fine. Bradley of W.E.Y. showed ability in the 440 and 880 yards. A. Watson (2) B. Surplis (C) and H. Lawson (3) giving him a close battle. S. Clanow W.E.Y., won the ball from his teammate, K. Emand, in 5 min. 15 sec. flat. K. Cooke, W.E.Y., captured the 12 in shot put handily from his teammate, Reid, and J. Young, his pal being 38 ft. 2 in.

In the under-18-years W. Watson, W.E.Y. rused supreme in the sprints, capturing the 50 and 220 yard 22-yard dashes as well as winning the 100-yd. dash under 16 years. A. Watson ruled in the sprints, likewise H. Surplis of Central, Y. carried off the broad jump, jumping 9 ft. 2½ in. in ins broad and 5 ft. 9½ in. in the high.

J. Vernon and H. Mellon, both of W.E.Y., waged a battle in the 880, but Vernon held his pal to first place in 2 min. and 36 sec. In the under-16-year class R. Darbyshire, of Central, was the star with 11 points, getting firsts in the 100-yard dash and broad jump and seconds in the 440 and 60-yard potato race. P. Bowiens (W.E.Y.) time of 64 3-5 sec. for the 440-yd. dash is decidedly fast for the under-16-year class. K. Mason, Orillia, was a fast 60-yard potato race in 14 3-5 sec. J. Pinn's (W.E.Y.) jump of 4 ft. 11¼ in. is also good for this class. The W.E.Y. team is a good organization for this title to remain with the West End Y.M.C.A.

SOMERVILLE OUT IN FINAL MATCH

Canadian Rallies in Morning, But Homans Finishes Strong in Second Round

Pinehurst, N.C., April 14.—Flashing sub-par golf that left seven birdies and an eagle on his card, Eugene Homans, Englewood, N.J., linksman and one-time Princeton star, bested C. Ross Somerville, London, Ont., former Canadian champion, three and one Saturday in the final match of the Spring and South amateur golf tournament.

Homans, who was two under par figures in his thirty-fifth hole, where he wound up the match started out the morning round in a fairy to establish a lead. but lapsed after the first nine holes and Somerville had a one-up lead at the end of the 18-hole morning round. Somerville shot his best golf of the day on the second side of the morning, 18 holes. He shot three birdies and went over perfect figures only once, chalking up a 33 against par figures of 35.

W. I. EXHIBIT

Fredericton, N.B., April 14. (CP)—New Brunswick Women's Institutes each year sponsor a W. I. exhibit, which, in 1929, was sent to Saint John Fredericton and Woodstock. The articles included patch work quilts, luncheon sets, 4nd sets of men's mittens, socks, double knitted in fancy patterns, for the senior and practical work spread and embroidered runners for the junior class. Sixty-seven W. I.'s competed.

"Y" Alleys

Two games were played in the Ladies' auxiliary league at the Recreation Alleys yesterday, the Shamrocks taking all four points from the Maple Leafs in the first game. Mrs. Shaddock rolled the high score for the Shamrocks when she hit them for 428. Mrs. Storms had the high single for this team of 164. Miss Prior was high for the Maple Leafs with a total of 338. The Ponies took three points from the Crescents in the second game winning the first and third point and the total. The Crescents won the second point by 13 pins. Mrs. Reppard was high for the Ponies with a total of 390 and a single of 174. For the Crescents Mrs. Callaghan was best with 371.

In a Ladies' junior game which was finished last night the Shamrocks took all four points from the Lucky Strike. P. Way with a total of 567 and a single of 259 was high for the Shamrocks. R. Tuttle of the same team also had a nice single of 260. H. Rowtobham with a total of 467 and single of 209 was high for the Lucky Strikes.

In a junior A group game between the Yard and the K. of C. the Yard took four points. Alexander was high for the Yard with a total of 588 and a single of 221. For the K. of C. Lee was best with total 502.

The Hardware No. 1 took three points from the Riots in a junior 1. Group. The Riots took one first point by over 100 pins but from then on they up and last the next two and the total. O. STUDYING BY PARTICIPATION Studying Canadian methods in farming is the aim of Mr. J. Proffitt who comes from the Antipodes to go upon a farm in this county. While he is imbibing some of our Canadian notions he will doubtless be able to contribute to us some knowledge of the experiences and methods of the agricultural population in his own country.

Mutual experience is good for both Canada and New Zealand. Some time ago a large number of farmers went to Denmark to study as a group in the Danish school of agriculture. They doubtless gained. Mr. Proffitt is a pioneer of a new type. He is the individual who comes here to go to work with brawn and brain to participate in Canadian agriculture. In the last analysis this is the best means of learning anything. To walk around inspecting is better than not to inspect but to participate is the most thorough way.

Hastings County yeomen will wish the young visitor from the land under the Southern Cross a happy experience as an Ontario farmer.

WAR'S NEW ENGINE

War's dread shade is seen in the latest invention which with more than human accuracy will speed to its destination without deviation and launch a plane load of explosive from the skies upon a doomed city or camp.

Modern invention is at the basis of this engine of death which will bring havoc from the air. Humanity will have no revenge against this thing which is not even beastly for it is unkillable, no human hand guides it to the slaughter of humans and destruction of property.

It will make war more terrible, most terrible with the threat if it should ever be adopted as a lineman of warfare.

Such an engine makes the nations think. Scientists have said that the next war if there is to be another war is to be on a scale of horror unanticipated even from the deluge of blood and the wreckage of the years 1914-1918. It appears as if such an engine is to be invented if it is not already a working possibility. A report from London says the new engine of death is guided by gyroscope, and other devices which keep it in an unswerving line.

Talk of a sense of horror in reading mystery tales! That would be nothing to the sadness of the people in anticipation of an attack from these unhuman weapons.

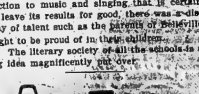
Though such a device has been perfected, that does not prove that it will be used. The world is looking hopefully forward to such a set of conventions and rules as will make warfare to a large measure impossible. But the world shows what may be expected in case there is a sudden outbreak of war with such weapons ready to be used. If wars are delayed for a few years and engines continue to be devised for warfare the more terrible it will be year after year.

Despatches have told that the new three power pact will save British taxpayers more than three hundred millions in the five year building holiday. Peace apparently may be made a paying and happy proposition with reduction of armament taxes and obliteration of ghastly fears of death-spreaders from the air.

NOT A FAILURE

That the London Peace Conference is not a failure is the view of Premier Macdonald and the other delegates in attendance at the parley. It has been a place of plain speaking and none of the delegations entered upon it thinking the way was rosy, they knew they had to come forward and tell what was in their minds—something the new diplomacy has given to the civilized world. Three powers have reached accord and the effects will go farther in the influence upon the other two. The powers not dealing an ideal has been achieved, but even the five powers themselves have a sort of agreement which is in part a reflection of the three power harmony. Submarine war is to be less barbaric. As expected the British and the Americans ironed out their contentions over guns.

The delegates sat down to a conference knowing the difficulties in the way and the results are at least a tribute to their sincerity.



THE NEW "LIT"

Belleville public and separate school pupils had on Friday evening a fine introduction to a literary society meeting. They contributed worthwhile numbers to the program along with the collegiate and vocational school students. Students of the primary and secondary schools proved themselves apt entertainers and an onlooker was struck with the keenness of the mentality of the little folk who participated in the program.

Training that leads to music, to acting, to interest in the highest and best such as these young entertainers prove they have received is the right kind. It leads to fondest hopes of the future generation, that they will be able to contribute no small share to the riches of life of the people of Canada of the future.

Friday evening they had the finest possible introduction to music as sung by students of all the institutions, in the acting of scenes from the immortal Charles Dickens. What child in the audience can forget the picture gallery from Dickens as portrayed in the sketch of the waxworks, written by Miss Betty Burrows or the scene where Bumble proposes or the delightful sketch for children of "The Friendly Waiter" from David Copperfield? There was an introduction to music and singing that is certain to leave its results for good, there was a display of talent such as the parents of Belleville ought to be proud of in their children.

The literary society of all the schools is a big idea magnificently developed.

HOUSE CLEANING

Good-bye, battered desk, faithful writing desk, good-bye!
She is giving you, I trust, to a worthier than I,
And is putting in your place a contrivance from the shop,
An efficient business desk with a vast and shiny top.

Good-bye, battered desk! You were worth your weight in gold,
For your pigeonholes and drawers and your dusty shelves could hold
All my documents so well that with hardly any stir
I could almost always tell pretty nearly where they were.

Good-bye, battered desk! I shall miss you night and day.
Your supplanter has two slides and a pen-and-pencil tray.
And a lot of clever tricks, with a filing system,
too,
Which inspires me with awe, and I don't know what to do.

Good-bye, battered desk! I shall mourn you late and long;
You have played a noble part in the History of Song;
You had just the proper breadth to accommodate my scrawl,
But on this unbounded waste, shall I ever write at all?

Good-bye, battered desk! Be as happy as you can.
In a world where Woman leers at the conscience of Man,
To the shabby hat and coat and the blackened briar bowl,
Though he grips the true and tried with the fibres of his soul!

—Arthur Guiterman.

STARTED IN 1861. the Panter grocery store, one of the last of the real old timers, was closed Saturday for the first time in nearly seventeen years on market day. Ex-Mayor William Panter has long took over the business after the death of his father, has been connected with the business for fifty years, and did not quit on account of old age, infirmity or any of those physical reasons. He has fifteen houses rented and proposes to build some more, so expects to remain reasonably busy. Also he proposes to watch the chain store movement which he thinks is at its highest tide now, and he expects to see the independent stores come into their own again on a real human and service basis.

"THIS IS A PRIVATE HOUSE" is a sign displayed in a fashionable section of New York City, so that it may not be mistaken for the the speakeasies which flutter about the neighborhood so lightly that the folks in one private house were awakened at all hours of the night, —hence the sign. So says the New York Times, sobered and steadiest of all the metropolitan newspapers.

A woman came into a car with five children. She hustled herself seating them. A benevolent old gentleman arose and gave her his seat.

"Are they all your children, madam?" he asked, "or is it a picnic?"

"They're all mine," snapped the woman, "and it's no picnic."

"It is a beautiful thing to see a husband and wife of one mind," remarked Mrs. Blogg.

"Yes," replied Blogg; "but then it makes a good deal of difference who carries the mind."

MODERN ETIQUETTE

"But he showed me some new steps and we sat on them."

Sandy had recently had his photograph taken, and, being pleased with it, took it round to show a friend, at the same time asking his opinion. His friend looked it over very critically, and casually remarked: "Rather flattering, isn't it?"

"Flattering!" said Sandy. "What makes you think that?"

"Well," replied the other, "I see you have your hand in your pocket."

WINDSOR GRADS DOWN MONTREAL

Windsor, April 14.—An unbeatable defensive system and deadly shooting by substituting a few factors that contributed to Windsor Alumni's well earned 27 to 18 victory over Montreal A.A.A. in the second game of the Eastern Canada senior basketball semi-final series at the Windsor Collegiate here Saturday night. The visitors were completely baffled by Windsor's solid checking in the second half and were held to one lone field goal and three free throws, while the locals were locating the meshes for 13 points.

The win put Windsor Alumni in the Eastern Canada senior basketball finals for the fourth time in as many seasons and the only Amalin Dominion now standing between them and another eastern title.

Friday night's game between the Montrealers and Alumni ended 21 to 21, so that the series honors rested on the outcome of Saturday's contest. Close to 1,200 fans, one of the biggest crowds ever gathered in the history of the game in the Border Cities, saw the Alumni team produce another of its famous rallies to catch the visitors in the late stages of the first half. At the breathing spell the count was 14 to 14.

HARDSHIP OF BEING RURAL MAGISTRATE

Gore Bay, Ont., April 14: (C P) — Some of the difficulties which beset rural magistrates were outlined to The Canadian Press recently by F. W. Major, police magistrate for the Manitoulin Island, and who is, by the way, one of the island's most enthusiastic boosters.

Mr. Major was recently called to Cockburn Island, which lies in the straits of Mississagi, on the northwest end of the Manitoulin, to preside over an inquest. The trip was made by automobile, driven part of the time on land and part on ice.

"We crossed the Mississagi Strait in the car, a distance of about 12 miles," Mr. Major said. "However, owing to the open water in the straits we had to detour some miles to the north and cross several large cracks in the ice. Travelling on the ice was great sport, for there was no snow and it was fine and hard, so we could make good time. When we came to some of the larger cracks, however, we had to proceed with great care, but despite all our precautions we got stuck in midchannel and were stuck there for some time.

"We had trailed two large planks to get the machine for use in crossing the cracks, but thoughtlessly neglected to use them at this one till we got in so far that we could neither go forward nor back up. However, by chopping, shovelling, pushing and pulling we managed to get out. There were five of us in the party, Dr. Fred strain, Provincial Constable Stewart, Alex. Burns, driver; Harold Purvis guide, and myself as coroner.

"After holding the inquest, we returned the same day without much difficulty. We found that Peter Cox had died from a fractured skull caused by a fall on the ice."

ALPINE CAMP IN THE ROCKIES

JASPER, Alta., April 14— Circulars have been issued and preparations are practically completed for the 26th annual camp of the Alpine Club of Canada, which will be held from July 26 to August 19 at Maligne Lake Jasper National Park. From Jasper Park lodge to Medicine Lake, a distance of about 20 miles, the Climbers will be transported by Automobile and they will hike or ride by pony the dozen miles between Medicine Lake and Maligne. Curly Phillips, the noted guide and cut flitter, who will handle the camp, will convey the members by power boat the length of Medicine Lake and to the upper end of Maligne. The main camp will be pitched here, close to the mouth of Coronet Creek on an extensive flat. The altitude is 5,500 feet and the camp will be in view of the most magnificent mountain scenery as well as of the largest lake in the Rockies. It is expected that the Alpine Club will add a number of first ascents to its record this summer. As many of the great glaciers girdled peaks in the district have neither been climbed nor named. Members of the British Medical Association who will hold their Convention at Winnipeg this summer and who will visit Jasper during their tour of Canada, have been invited to join the camp as some of them are known to be keen alpinists.

Ford Spent Day With Jack Miner

KINGSVILLE, April 12.—Henry Ford made his first trip over the Ambassador bridge Thursday to call on his friend, Jack Miner, at Kingsville to celebrate with him on his 65th birthday.

Asked how long he expected to live Mr. Miner said he was not worrying much because he was too busy living to think of dying. Thousands of letters and many telegrams from all over the continent congratulated Mr. Miner on his birthday. He is enjoying the best of health.

CANADA AND HER PLACE IN INTERNATIONAL A RENA AT GENEVA

Works of League Now Better Known in This Country

Considered in the abstract, methods and agencies of education may not be thought by many men and women to be of much concern to them, but this part that the abstract term "education", has played in the passionate politics of Canada indicates the lively interest in the subject. It should therefore be a service to draw attention to the activities of educational organizations and, at this moment, particularly so in the case of the League of Nations Society which is now asking for renewals and increase of membership that it might meet the inviting challenge that the present day puts before it.

It must be said at the outset that education which smacks too much of propaganda in the invidious sense of that word will immediately arouse an attitude of hostility. That such should not be the case with the League of Nations Society is apparent from a study of the information which it seeks to distribute to its constituency. Primarily its function is to further the purposes of the League of Nations, surely an accepted historical fact, and inform the public of its activity- but just as important is its function of getting an informed public opinion back of what the League stands for and catering to the ever increasing interest Canadians must show in international affairs. Dr. O. D. Skilton has pointed out to the Committee of the House of Commons on Industrial and International Relations the suddenness with which Canadians have been "pitchforked" into the international arena and how many hostages Canadians have given to international fortune. The forces that have made in a generation or two the whole world into a single market will force Canadians to study their country's external relations. The League of Society, its publications and its organ "Interdependence", are designed to aid in that work.

In confining consideration to what the Society is doing to help the work of the schools it is interesting to note that the educational report of 1926 stated "that apart from two or three of the provinces, virtually nothing was being done in the matter of League education". Attention to this fact was drawn to the proper authorities by the Society and every effort was made to co-operate in its correction.

A booklet prepared under the auspices of the Society, "A New World or the League of Nations" has become a part of the courses in Manitoba and Nova Scotia and as supplementary texts in a number of the other provinces. More than 10,000 copies were printed in English and 5,000 in French. Incidentally the book has been republished by the League of Nations Unies in South Africa. Other efforts have been made to bring a realization of the present international situation to the students of the schools and suitable literature is distributed for this. In the report prepared by Lt.-Col. C. P. Meredith, the Society's General Secretary, it is stated that while much has been done much remains to be done. The education committee of the Society, he stated, urges that the League should be better represented in the history courses, that additional texts for the schools should be prepared, that instruction in training should precede courses of instruction and that an itinerant professor should be engaged to give lecture courses on international affairs and the League at the Universities. These are some of the suggestions that the Society will consider. In its consideration of them it will have the benefit of the debate in the House of Commons on Miss Agnes Macphail's resolution asking for the establishment of chairs for international studies in Canadian Universities. In that debate, scarcely without exception, there was an expression of view which Hon. Mr. Bennett, the Leader of the Opposition put in the following words "The reign of law can be established only if you have a strong enlightened and informed public opinion directing the agencies of legislature and of nations."

It is significant that for the first time the Committee of the House on Industrial and International Relations is considering a problem relating to the latter half of its name, namely the very subject of education and international affairs.

Those who join the League of Nations Society will find an opportunity for satisfying very vital interests and for supporting the greatest crusade of the present day.

WORLD'S RECORD TRAIN TIME

CANADA is setting the pace for the world, it was announced in transcontinental passenger service by the Canadian National Railways to go into effect on April 27, includes new trains between Montreal and Toronto that will be the fastest in the world covering a like distance. The famous International Limited, traveling westward, and the Inter-City eastbound, will speed over the 334 miles of track between Montreal and Toronto in 360 minutes. Leaving these terminals at 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. respectively, and arriving at destination six hours later, these trains, will enable the business man in either city to put in practically a full day's work at his desk and reach the other city that same evening.

With this world-record link in the centre, the Canadian National will also be shortened on the afford the Canadian public new fast service to Chicago and U.S. border cities, and through connection with the Confederation, there will be big saving in time to Winnipeg. The International Limited will make the run to Chicago four hours less than under the old schedule. To and from Buffalo and Detroit large improvements are also effected. By taking the International to Toronto and joining the Confederation there the traveller will be able to reach Winnipeg from Montreal with the loss of virtually only one business day in travel. The Confederation is to be speeded up by one hour between Toronto and Winnipeg and by three hours between Toronto and Vancouver. RADIO FANS CORNER

What-ho, Everybody happy? Should be, the reception last night showed such a heap of improvement that we almost begin to believe our troubles were all over. Saturday night's reception was decidedly not up to much.

At last Amos 'n' Andy have yielded to temptation and signed a movie contract. They did it! It's only too true fans so I suppose that means that we will be losing them soon. They are going to Hollywood to inject their black-face patter into a $1,000,000 musical comedy drama for RKO pictures.

The story "Check and Double Check" has as yet not been written but will no doubt be based on their radio presentations.

Our first stop tonight will be at 7:15 at WJZ and we'll hear the Lonesome Cowboy, John White, who will sing cowboy songs to us accompanied on his guitar. By the way he has a lovely tenor voice, if you need any more urging.

At 7:30, same place, Roxy and his Gang make their appearance and tonight are featuring Dorothy Miller, soprano. Must be good for Roxy has only the best on his programs.

Eight o'clock, WEAF, change of scenery, Voice of Firestone greets us with Alma Vaughn de Leslie, conductor, Franklyn Baur, tenor, and their concert orchestra. The guest artist tonight will be Edmund Ruffner.

Back to WJZ again at nine to hear Ted Pierito and his Mayfair orchestra and also the male trio which appears on this program weekly and Tom, Dick and Harry, Reading and Flint, piano duo. Quite an imposing array isn't it?

Real Folks at 9:30 over WJZ and Matt promises lots of fun. Let's go.

KAYE DON POSTPONES SPEED MARK ATTEMPT

Daytona Beach, April 14 —Kaye Don British race car driver, who has postponed indefinitely his attempt to break the world's automobile speed record, announced Sunday that his plans for the attempt to race on other attempts were uncertain.

He plans to leave here for New York for a conference with Count Zborolski, designer of his Silver Bullet machine, to decide whether to return to his home in England immediately or wait for more favorable beach conditions than have been obtained since he arrived here six weeks ago.

He intimated that if he did not return he might consider going to South Africa where Malcolm Campbell, another British driver and former record holder, made an unsuccessful attempt on the record a year ago.

Motor trouble, inclement weather or a rough beach have kept him from attaining a speed of even 200 miles.

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

DEAR READERS:—

A charming bedroom is something that every girl should achieve. You may not think so, but it is true that by exercising a little forethought you can have a bedroom which will delight both yourself and your friends with its dainty charm. You do not need a matching suite, nor expensive furniture. Neither is it necessary to indulge in costly hangings. Any chest or chiffonier may be painted into delightful relation to any gay colour scheme. Ruffled counterpanes are inexpensive, easily made, and smart. Flounces and ruffling and dear little chints covered chairs bring charm and look like a million dollars, even though they will cost little more than a few cents. Color schemes may be bright and pretty, rugs may be used with most pleasing effects, and in short refurnishing need not merely find a place in which to sleep, but a place of charm to which you may bring your friends with pride.

CONQUEST

She had a way
Of sweeping up a room
Then for a minute
Hanging on the broom.

Plumb in the middle—
There she would stand
Holding a broom
And the world in her hand.

—Eleanor O'Rourke Kpenig, in "Two On an Old Pathway."

Dear Reader would you like me to tell you how to change your own room this spring? Suppose you turn the woodwork into a clear orange shade and combine it with cream-colored walls. Your window-curtains of cream grounded cretonne will be patterned with bright dark blue, orange and yellow. The pillow-throws will be of orange Japanese crepe, edged at each end with a wide strip of the figured cretonne. The bedspread you can make of unbleached muslin, and you could paint that old chest of drawers black, giving it knobs and line-trimmings of bright dark blue. The mirror will be lovely with a frame of dark blue, with attached candle sockets holding orange candles. On the floor you can use bright dark-blue wool rugs, and if you possess an old wash stand paint it bright orange so that it will set off the deep-blue Italian pottery wash-bowl and pitcher. Two little straight chairs of the same orange hue will complete the room, and if you are not delighted and satisfied with the lovely effect, you have not an eye for beauty.

I feel that all this renovating is unnecessary to your particular bedroom dear reader transform it by purchasing a few yards of gayly patterned chintz, or perhaps you need a fresh window pane to get the necessary touch. Pale green would be lovely and it is so cool for the summer.

Fashionably yours,

LUCILLE.

Kingdom Of God Theme Of Sermon

Right Rev. Bishop C. A. Seager Conducted Special Service

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," was the message that His Lordship, Bishop C. A. Seager left with a confirmation class of thirty-seven last night in Christ Church, when the ancient and religious ceremony of "Laying on of hands" was performed. The Bishop was assisted by the Rector, Rev. C. E. Clarke, Rev. A. L. Geen, and Deacon Morris Lazier. Miss Etta Lavoie, organist of the church, gave a number of beautiful offertories on the organ before the confirmation and the choir rendered a delightful anthem. The church was filled to capacity long before the starting of service and a most impressive service was delivered by the Bishop.

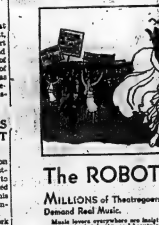
quoted, asked each candidate to repeat the same and engrave it on the heart, the necessity of this life enfolds the real purpose for which we were sent, and many are asking the question, what is christianity? and the answer comes down through the ages, seek ye the Kingdom of God. What does the Kingdom of God mean? It is something, that is near or far and he will set up a nation here on earth. We Anglo-Saxons are so hard-headed we want everything in concrete form but Christ is building His Kingdom. We should watch and pray for we know not when the Son of Man cometh, for the Kingdom of God is among you, and with you 24 all times. He teaches the great message of the brotherhood of men. The new birth of civilization was in the Upper Room at Jerusalem and it is striking off its manacles, that have embodied the world for centuries.

Jesus is the pioneer of all the ages and will be till the end of time. The problem of the 20th century centres around world peace and the Naval Parley in London now in progress, and the convention to be convened in June in London to unite all misguided fields are steps in the right direction."

At St. Thomas'

Bishop Seager was present at St. Thomas' Church yesterday morning to confirm a confirmation ceremony on forty-three candidates. The service, which was a particularly impressive one, was attended by an extremely large congregation, the church being filled to capacity. In addition, special music had been arranged by the choir which concurred with the spirit or the occasion.



Mr. Ross Hunter sang "The Palms," by Faire, before the reception of candidates and the choir rendered the anthem "O Lord" "Our Strength" during the offertory. In addition to reading the congregation in the singing of the various hymns.

Essence of Christianity

"The essence of Christianity lies in the taking of the Holy Communion," the Bishop continued. Holy Communion factors make up Christianity, and they are Redemption, Grace and Service. The speaker then went on to explain the meanings of these three words, pointing out the fact that we become Jesus Christ is what He is to us today. In that his whole character was made up of Redemption, Grace and Service. We become the same as those three, but more we are like Jesus Christ, and possions of those qualities are passed on to us in direct proportion to our faith.

"The Church of England today is standing at the crossroads and the choice must be born again in the hearts and souls of the members of the church, a new spirit, indeed, a new outlook, if our church is to render real and true distribution to the life of Canada. All work that is worth anything must have oftentimes, real grudgery, yet the glory of it is that the constructive forces are united somewhere. Again I say, that spirit must be born again," declared the Bishop in conclusion.

During the service, Bishop Seager was assisted by Rev. Canon Bedford Jones, St. Thomas' Church, and Rev. A. L. Geen, assistant rector.

EIGHTY CANDIDATES CONFIRMED AT CITY ANGLICAN CHURCHES

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The House That Came to Life

By

Lura Cooley Hamil

Copyright, 1930, International Features Service, Inc.

It was a house that spoke of times long dead, of hopes long dead, of broken promises, of painful resignation. Marked by sagging beams and rotting posts that staggered under the weight of the balcony, by a neglected board-walk, the old Cary house was at once the pride and the despair of the corvillon.

Cary pride would not accept the friendliest overtures for the decent disposal of this wreckage of old buildings, and a harassed banker and Miss Phoebe Bailey, sister of his business mate through four years at School, their joint comrade in a score of good times, Girl too of his dreams, both young and lacking confidence he had let no one guess that.

He took the crazy steps at a bound rang called her name. Then like two children they sat down on the old stair-case to laugh again, explain, and plan.

Miss Phoebe fluttered about like a distracted wren. Sally had kissed her reminded that she was Jacie's dear and an old, old friend of the family. Which family, he gathered at last. Was Miss Phoebe's own. A newly discovered relationship, but that fact in childish happy eyes was a mere middle. She was planning to give a tea for Sally at once and that Sally's dear look, shocked and sorry as the little old lady made her plans.

"You can help me, Dick," the girl said gally. "I can't have Cousin Phoebe overdoing and I do adore part of the fun. She will want to invite Dick knew that fine, copperplate, engraved invitations. He counted how many, I will let you take me down to order the things."

At Miss Phoebe's shocked protest she amended quickly.

"For the cakes, you know, that Anna will make. This is to be like the birthday tea Cousin Phoebe had for me. I don't think giving it will hurt her if Anna and Sud get us plenty of help."

"If"—Dick hesitated, "if my aunt can help you in any way—"

Miss Phoebe had not heard him, but Sally, not a little relieved, accepted the offer promptly and went with him to present the aunt.

"Dick! Isn't it marvelous and isn't it a mess!—Come to tea about till Christmas! And father had found some old investments of hers that Sime-tax) today at any drug store, for only 60c. Money back if you can't soon find pains gone, sleep fine, feel younger, stronger and full of pep.

Cross trees of Australia and other South Pacific islands are called "black boys," because at a distance they are often mistaken for natives, having tops resembling black heads with colour hair.

Speaking of The Beauty Box

Because of hustling their waist lines with corsets women became thoracic breathers, the movements of the chest being noticeable, the breast rising and falling with every respiration. Men became more naturally, from the lower part of the chest, the air trickling into the lower cells of the lungs, washing them out, and then passing upon the blood and all the vital organs. Medical examiners say that almost all men now breathing more normally, even those who were corset-bound in past years. So something has been accomplished.

Long hair grows six inches a year and fluffs away at the ends six inches a year, always retaining the same length. The reason why the ends of the hair are lighter in color and the reason why the ends are bleached the points are dead tissues, done for and on their way.

Beneath the surface of the skin are soft padding cells that hold it and is nourished from within. The thin woman with the dried skin or wrinkled complexion should keep that fact in mind, and spread the butter on a little heavier than she butters her bread. If skin cushions are to resist the sagging and evaporating effects of age, there should be a certain amount of fat included in the diet. External oilings, like oil of almonds, every night willy-nilly, cross her heart, she should use her tissue building cream. Every morning, before she puts on her cold water application to harden and vitalize the muscles.

The Poor Man's Friend—Put up in small bottles that are easily portable and sold for a very small sum, Dr. Thomas Eclectric Oil possesses power in concentrated form. Its cheapness and the varied uses to which it can be put make it a poor man's friend. No dealer's stock is complete without it.

COMFORT IN CAPELETS

Comfort in capelets is the latest offering of lounging pyjamas. The sleeved jet has now completed the Spring sartorial triumph, having won its way into every corner of the wardrobe. A review of the line of new frocks, hanging in one's closet might reveal caped sleeves on sleeveless sports frocks, the capelets flying from one shoulder, dresses of silk and wool, deep capelet collars on afternoon dresses and soft fluttering capelets attaching themselves to evening gowns. There is one point likely be a cape coat on that most irresistible of all costumes, the sports suit.

One such is illustrated in the sketch above which remarks several points of style interest in printed silk. The combination of brown and pale yard here to design the floral motif is one of the favorite new color combinations. Here the sleeveless blouse with its surplice neckline is of dusty pink satin which emphasizes the beauty of the blooming pinks on the cape and trousers. The same pink satin outlines the cape and develops deep inserts on the trousers. Beneath and cotton walk hand in hand through the Spring mode.

Asa Wallbridge was Original Paper Subscriber

Paid For First Subscription With A Load of Wood

Amalgamation of The Daily Ontario and The Daily Intelligencer recalls the interesting fact that Asa Wallbridge, municipal pioneer, Ernesttown county farmer, was an original subscriber to The Intelligencer and was on the mailing list from the day the name of that paper was put on the map. While Mr. Wallbridge has been dead for many years his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Snowdon, who resided at R.R. No. 9 Belleville, on the Bayside farm which is now operated by a nephew of the late Asa Wallbridge, C. Anderson.

The late Mr. Wallbridge, who was an ardent Tory and a great admirer of the late Sir Mackenzie Bowell, died in 1898.

Mrs. Howitson has furnished The Ontario Intelligencer with a copy of an interview which appeared in The Intelligencer many years ago and which we reproduce herewith:

"Asa Wallbridge, of Ameliasburg, county of Prince Edward, who was still today and related the interesting fact that he had been a subscriber to

The Intelligencer since its first issue over fifty years ago and a constant reader of it ever since first the weekly and then the daily, was published. He stated further that before the late George Benjamin issued the first number of The Intelligencer in 1833 he met him on the street and told him he wanted his name as a subscriber as he intended publishing a paper if he could secure sufficient names. Mr. Wallbridge gave his name and paid for the first year's subscription with a load of wood. Since then the paper has flourished and the old subscriber enjoys good health, though his hearing is somewhat impaired. He will celebrate his Golden Wedding Anniversary on the 18th of January, 1931, at the family residence. Our best wish es are heartily extended to him and Mrs. Wallbridge that they may both then long life and many returns of the season. This notice would not be complete were we to omit the parting words, 'I am as staunch a Tory as ever'."

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

It had been a sudden impulse but she had warmed her hands, liked that she had not quite so forlorn. She whipped up their interest and fooled Ah Ling's frivolous little vanity-case for Ah Ling.

Looking abnormally serious, Tom Orbell came into the shop one day and tried to make her promise to have Christmas dinner with him, at the home of the married sister where he took his horse.

"ARDETH COULDN'T DO IT

"Lyn's having a dinner party. Twelve people—you and I will make it fourteen. Please, Ardeth, Carolyn's a peach. She made me promise to make you come. She'd come down here and ask you herself but she never did get on with the cabby."

But Ardeth shook her head. Panic looked out of the golden eyes. She laugh and talk with twelve strangers—baking her heart from their kind, outlaw eyes on this Christmas which she had once planned to spend with Emil Oh, no! Not yet! The wound was still too raw

A shadow crept in Tom's kind brown eyes and his mouth set stubbornly. "Remember what I said on the snow party, Ardeth. Things don't always turn out as one figures them. I haven't given up hope, dear."

And suddenly it was Christmas. She was lying in bed, looking at the ever-east morning light slanting in the window. Hearing the church bells ring far over the city. Feeling her heart ache with loneliness.

Ardeth had expected no gifts. Amas might they came, to move her to tears. A note from Jeanette—a lovely silken thing, the russet and copper tones lighting her lawny hair and sudden eyes to something of their old flame.

A volume of poems in a hand-tooled leather binding. A gift from Mary Westwood. Several of the verses were marked and on a card Mary had written, "I too went through a dark hour, Ardeth, and I found these lines a little comfort."

Ardeth held the card against her cheek for a moment as though it were the kind white hand of the giver.

From Tom came a long string of amber, and written in Tom's cramped square writing, "These made me think of your eyes."

Tremulous thankfulness welled up in the girl's heart breaking the ice of loneliness. Ah, life was not all bliss! Friends.....people who loved her for herself.....

And in the middle of the afternoon, a florist boy with a long box.

White roses, unreal in their waxen perfection. Half roses, on a bed of acid green maiden-hair they came to Ardeth as happiness transformed from dreams. White roses....as though for a dead girl....

She sent for Mrs. Bell, she needed no card to know they came from Ken.

Reading years circuitous on the wall, as gelatin as she lifted them from the box. Oh, this for on her heart! Ken, longing for her. Thinking of her even as she, Ondardi of jade, this later Christmas. Easier to bear if he had forgotten her.....

White roses—sneering—creeping into Spring. Daylight flooding the room on the day when she left the shop now. Up in his corner where Ken used to wait for her daffodils and its replaced violets on the flower stand.

CECILE BLOSSOMS OUT

Cecile had wearied of the whim of mourning. She blossomed forth in an extreme and expensive suit of orchid tweed. A smart French beret, of orchid felt was pulled down over the tat ty waves of her hair and a choker of amethysts clasped her long white throat. She did the eyelids, however, here. Cecile's upper eyelids were orchid shadowed and her long oval nails were tinted mauve.

The women positively hate me if I" said Rachael Westwood vicariously to Ardeth. "She reminds me of food slightly turned.

A crowd in the Sunkerie today. See on those bad Ah Ling brewed tea and emptied ash trays. Cyril Underhill was in his element, murmuring his assured, faux footnotes to the tinkle of appreciative feminine laughter.

Echoes of the talk drifted out to the girl who tended the outer shop and Ardeth's lip curled. They were reading extracts from The Spy. How blood mounted to the girl's face, she hated that insidious magazine. Hated the title, scandalous women. Thank heaven they were soon gone.

Sound of the outer door opening. She looked up—caught her breath.

Ken coming in.

A blank moment when Ken's eyes clung to her own. A moment heart a little shook seemed to race to a great distance. Then the sound of voices, the clatter of tea cups from the Smoke Shop appeared to die, so that she and Ken faced each other across a black greyness which held neither time nor reality.

Sharp dismay in the girl's heart. Oh, he was so changed! It was not so much that he looked older, as that something of youth was gone.

The compelling Ken of that golden Summer with the marvelous laughter. Ken who had dragged her away from Tom on the toboggan slide. Ken who had left in the man who now came slowly into the shop.

Yet the brilliant Ken of those days never dragged on her heart existing as the sight of him dragged now. Ardeth felt her face go cold. Her hand moved in a little flutter to her throat.

"Why.....Ken....

He came over to her the glass case. Paced her and she gained the impression that he had a tight leash on his mood to keep from going to pieces.

"I guess if the dead can come back, it's like this—" He tried to smile and the result hurt her.

"Oh, no ..." Her voice was bleak. "Why.....why?"

He answered the unspoken question. "To take Cecile home. You mustn't think I came on purpose. You mustn't think that, Ardeth. I had to talk to Cecil Westwood. But she asked—and I couldn't refuse without—without—"

She finished the thought in her mind. Refused to call for the woman she'd left in a note with Cecile. A note that ended with scenes of Ardeth's. Sneers which would have hurt him.

Ken's eyes were clinging her in as a thirsty man would gulp water. The clear naturalness of her. The warm human quality. The tender curve in the soft lips. The sweet frankness of her gaze.....Ah! After months of Cecile's artificiality! Ah, the man found them doubly dear.

A wave of yearning love went over his heart. He found himself asking in a shaking voice: "How are you, Ardeth, ting on, Ardeth. What do you do.....

Ah, the old light-hearted movement as though her hands would fly away, "Oh, I'm fine. The shop. And I read a lot."

His eyes had found a place where the bright hair brushed her temple. A place his lips had known.

He gave a little harsh laugh. "Hard to believe, isn't it, Ardeth—don't let me keep you from your work. I'm not what I mean—your own life. Just because mine's wrecked.....

"Oh, no." Her voice was faint. She began to stroke the low, black orchid feathers of a fan."

"Well, I was beginning to think you never coming; Ken!" Cecile's voice stood through the hair. She stood in the doorway of the Smoker-ie carrying a tray through the vapour of her perfumed cigarette. The pale grey eyes held a bright, malicious hate as she swept the other girl's face.

This offense of Ken made it hard er to bear. If he had deliberately hurt her, her pride would have braced Ardeth. She could have forced to go out with Tom—made herself prove that delirious, happy time. But to see him unhappy—knowing he was yearning for her.....

A few nights later, as she walked up the hill toward her hotel she heard her name called and stood beside her "Emil!" Her voice was slightly incredulous. Not since that Stormy scene with Karl had she seen Neil. He had sunk out of sight with that earlier life of hers which had become dreamlike.

It was so long since she had even thought of Neil that she looked at him with sweet embarrassment. All the sentiment had died—all feeling toward him, in fact.

"Just happened to be passing—caught sight of you—" He sounded plagued awkwardly.

An embarrassed little pause when neither seemed to say the thing that filled his step to hers—was walking up the hill.

Astonishing to have him appear out of the past like this. A certain relief at force about him. Had he always been so big? Her eyes like beneath her lashes.

Hastings Trapper Is Painfully Hurt While at Work

Sanford Lawrence of Marmora Had Hand Caught in Trap

Marmora, April 12. (By Mail) — Mr. Sanford Lawrence, noted trapper, and hunter, of Marmora, sustained a painful accident last Sunday morning when in examining a trap set for bear a week previously, he slipped, causing his left wrist to be caught between the teeth of the trap. Fortunately for him no bones were broken, though one of the teeth penetrated the wrist. The accident occurred near Burnt Lake, about twenty-two miles north of Marmora. Lawrence freed his wrist with the aid of a small axe which he was carrying, and walked twelve miles to the residence of Charles Wells, from where he was conveyed to Marmora to receive medical aid. The place where the accident happened is six miles from the nearest inhabitant, and had Mr. Lawrence's injuries been more severe, he doubtless would have laid helpless for hours before being discovered. This is the first accident to occur to this stalwart hunter, famed about six years ago for the bagging of five bears. He hopes to be able to return to his various traps within a week, but not without a companion. He states that he has found much evidence of wolves being plentiful in that part of the country.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

"It seems selfish for us to be so bad by Cass, when poor old Mart has to give up his trip to Germany."

"D'you suppose it means so much to him?"

"Oh, Cass! With Doctor van Antwerp!"

"Well—if I get going—Cass reminded her, gaily.

There was a silence. Mary Kate had not heard him. Her blue eyes were animated with a sudden change of expression; she was looking into space, frowning faintly, lightly biting her scarlet lower lip.

"Oh, my goodness—" she breathed. "What it is!" the man asked.

"O, heavens!" ejaculated Mary Kate still in the same abstracted undertone

But she would not say what it was. Instead she laughed, her face suddenly lit.

Cass kissed the fragrant, silky top of her head, and went on with his plans. "Listen, dear—"

Obediently she listened. Or rather she tried to listen. But her thoughts were racing now, and her senses consumed.

Something rather odd had occurred that very day in the office. Something that had seemed to Mary Kate quite unimportant at the time, if rather puzzling and amusing. But now it came back to her in a different guise.

She hadn't had any special urgent need of money, then. But all sorts of things had changed, even since three o'clock this afternoon.

The news of Mark's chance to go abroad, was one thing. Her engagement—she was engaged—was another.

Gordon Rountree, his employer, rich and spoiled and fat and almost shky, had come into her office, or rather had unexpectedly appeared in his own for she worked in his office. And with him had been Mr. Christopher Steynes a big, fair-haired, too, well-dressed person of about thirty, or may be a little more.

These two had talked mysteriously and confidently to Mary Kate. Mr. Rountree had done most of the talking. Mr. Steynes somewhat anxiously watching.

"We want you to do us a tremendous favour." Mr. Rountree had said half laughing and wholly nervous. "It's something—ah—that you needn't—that is, you mustn't—mention to anyone, least of all your—ah—mother."

"There's no harm in it," Christopher Steynes had put in soothingly, with an air of annoyance and reluctance and brevity. And both men had laughed, and somewhat uncomfortably.

"I have to tell my mother everything," Mary Kate.. suspicions that they were laughing at her, had said uncompromisingly.

"Exactly..... But—but not—ah—until afterwards," Gordon Rountree had said.

"Couldn't!" Mary Kate was always helpful even in bewilderment, and affront. "Couldn't Miss Malloy do it, for you?"

Honora Malloy was Father Malloy's first cousin, and fifty-two, and she kept a pretty sharp eye upon the younger girls in the office and saw that they didn't "overlook any fast days, in the days of obligation."

Evidently not. For Mr. Rountree had shaken his head with a level look. "Miss Malloy is the lady who is attending to your insurance, Chris," and this time he used the name.

Well, that had been about all of that Mary Kate could remember, except only to this extent promising to respect it, had politely declined to consult or the matter further.

But now, in the evening, she did consider it further. Undoubtedly these men would have been willing to pay for anything they wanted done. Probably this had been part of it. She was to do something for them, and they would pay her.

Suppose they had been willing to pay a hundred dollars? Oh, thrills, to come home and give Mart a hundred dollars, as a start toward Germany!

Then that happy illusion for four times, and he need have no misgivings about leaving the family to shift for itself.

Suppose it had been five hundred —? Perhaps she had been a fool to be so firm.

Anyway, Mr. Rountree had said "Consider it," and you Miss O'Hara? I assure you I would not be so deeply in your debt."

Certainly Mr. Rountree wouldn't want her to do anything wrong. He was rather an old worldling, but his attitude toward the girls in the office was always one of deep respect and kindly aloofness.

No harm, tomorrow, to follow it up a little—

"What are you thinking about?" Cass asked.

"Oh, wouldn't you like to know!" "Is it about a man?"

"Well, yes." Her joyous, mischievous laugh. "It is, Cass."

"Young?"

"About thirty-two, I guess."

"Handsome?"

"Let me think. Yes. Very."

"Rich?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Look here , don't let you think about young men, you know. You belong to me now."

"Oh, is that so?"

"You heard me."

"Tomorrow night, I'll tell you! Until then," Mary Kate stipulated. "I'm free to get into trouble if I like."

"Yes, but don't darling."

"Well, I never have." Her voice fell to speculative note. "I wonder what it'd be like, to get into trouble, Cass?" she mused. "To have all your world against you, to bitterly, bitterly regret something?"

Her tone arrested him, he glanced down with a little surprise at her face on his breast.

"God grant you never know, Mary Kate!"

"Amen!" said Mary Kate.

CHAPTER VI.

Mrs. O'Hara and her two younger daughters returned to the kitchen at twenty minutes to ten. She beheld with some little surprise, that Mary Kate and the Keating boy were still there.

She sat down, sighing heavily; her rosy, full face was spattered with rain and her rich black hair pressed down her bonnet. Her rubbers she instead lately removed, holding it in her hand and glancing at it speculatively from time to time.

"Go to bed now, girls, before you get settled down here," she said.

"Come on, Regina," said Tess.

Regina had cast herself into a chair at the table, upon which she had stretched her slim arms, laying her fair head upon them.

"I'm dead!" she said, in the tone of a child who means, lightly and play fully, to be troublesome.

"Oh, come on!" Tess repeated.

"Go on, Regina, and get to bed now otherwise it's a poor reward I'd have takin' you to the movies at all." Mrs. O'Hara said briskly, but absently. One had to take this tone hourly with the children.

"I tell you I can't!" Regina protested, laughing, but not stirring.

"She wahts me to turn down the bed and open the window and everything." Tess said accusingly.

"Jump up and run along, darlins It's nearly nine o'clock."

"Come on, Regina."

Regina then Mary Kate. "Go on now Regina, stop pretending you are going to sleep there—go on, now."

"Looka the way Pat went right to bed, lovey."

"I tell you I can't, Mother!"

"There, now, enough's enough!" Mrs. O'Hara said decisively. She rose and gripped the small girl's shoulder. "Get up to bed, now, with Tess," she commanded. Regina knew this tone. She burst into tears.

"I was only foolin', and if Pat had done it, you'd all think he was funny," she shrilled, crossing the Kitchen in a single streak, like a cat, and tearing curtains on a stream of sobbing protest, the sympathetic and virtuous Tess behind her. "I hate you all—and you are all mean," shrieked Regina from the unseen spaces beyond the kitchen.

The door swung shut; there was peace.

"That's the way she always is when she goes to the movies, Mother."

"She's tired. Mrs. O'Hara said tentidly. "Aren't you two going to the dance, Mary Kate?"

"Mother, Ma,"

Mary Kate had long ago left her perch on Cass' knee. She was standing at the sink now, opening a bottle of ginger ale.

"You'd wonder where they get the silly plots they do," the older woman said dreamily. "This girl—her father was a Wall Street stockbroker, and he gave her a coming-out party. They had a sort of canal through the parlor and colyums and lantherns, and some Turkish priests or I don't know whatever they were, were rowing aroun' in those flme canoes that look like gravy boats. Too of those lives was a prince, it appears, that was only a little boy at the time of the war—and he give the girl a necklace that whoever wore it would be kidnapped by the head of Isis chan.

"I couldn't keep it straight, once they all got into the Ch.amain's head quarters," she added, simply. And then suddenly arousing herself, "Did Pat make buns?"

"He did not," said Mary Cate, angry that she must bring that little shade of sadness and care to her mother's forehead.

"Mart went to the library," Mrs. O'Hara stated rather than asked.

"But he said he'd be home early Ma."

"Oh," said Mrs. O'Hara, "I'd never worry about that."

The one she would worry about was evidently heavy upon her heart. Mary Kate, having distributed three half-filled glassed, changed the tone of the conversation by saying animately, yet a little self-consciously.

"Mother, did you see what I was doing when you came in?"

Her mother's quick, suspicious eye grew glaksy.

"What were you doin', then?"

"I was stuting Cass Keating's hair!" Mary Kate reminded her, with a joyous flash of laughter.

"Well, I wouldn't publish that in the paper," Mary O'Hara said darkly and disapprovingly.

"But, Mother darling, doesn't that mean anything to you?"

Another scornful and suspicious look. Cass began to look acutely uncomfortable, and Mary Kate, flushing reflected ruefully that Ma always acted in this stiff, offended way when anything was sprung on her.

"In three days," the older woman began with dignity, after a short pause, "you'd not know that anything meant anything the way they go on!"

This obscure statement stung Cass Keating into quick protest.

"Not with a girl like Mary Kate!" he said loyally.

"Mary Kate and the rest—unless she's fuller of infringe and nonsense than the rest of them!" persisted Mrs. mother, sharply.

"Cass and I are engaged, Ma!" the girl burst out, indignantly, with signs of tears.

Then there was a pause. Cass watched his prospective mother-in-law eagerly, expectantly, ready to meet halfway any demonstration of pleasure or affection. Mary Kate stood haughtily at the sink, her glass in her hand, her blue eyes fixed angry, yet the black silky lashes wet.

"Indeed!" said Mrs. O'Hara politely She inclined her head with a majestic nod of recognition.

Another pause. Cass cleared his throat.

"I hope you don't mind my—my wanting to marry Mary Kate?" he said, awkwardly.

To Teres O'Hara the moment was heavy with agony. Her little girl ripe for wifehood and motherhood—oh no, it couldn't be true. It couldn't be true that the baby girl who only yesterday was wearing a caped coat, and toddling along a sunny Sunday block with her little hand in her father's—another hand, was ready to think of having a little girl baby of her own! Wasp Mary Kate ready to begin life with Cass Little Catechism and the greatest common denominator? She was not prepared from the high school child who used to come racing into a winter kitchen with a pack of cards tucked, giddy, scale-practicing and schoolgirlishness all about her, to be pitched up the back stairway, "Ma, can we make candy? Ma, can I go over to Nellie's?

Sweet and pure and young and untouched, ah, God, how untouched, to talk of intrigue and nonsense! But this girl was really a girl, illusioned and unsuspecting, who had given her kisses for her mother and her brothers and sisters, nothing of these days, to take the head of this man's table in her inexperienced eyes and anxious training. Mary Kate, this man whom who has placed her whole happiness in her hands, was a man to be dependent to choose, in her giddy, happy adored girlhood, the man whose purse and whose protection she must own room she must share for all the rest of her days.

A pang of jealous anguish smote the mother, as she thought of Mary Kate going and fragrant and bewildered in this dark boy's eager arms, and she sat rigid and unfriendly and affronted and unable to share his easy excitement, and triumph.

"Mother, Cass, aren't you going to say anything?" demanded Mary Kate, as proud as she.

There was a great deal more to it, than that," Mrs. O'Hara volunteered after a pause. A silence in which she had merely said, "H'm!"

"More to what than what, Mother?" the girl demanded impatiently.

The older woman sighed; her look opaque and unsympathetic.

"Marriage," she observed oracularly, "isn't any joke. There's trifles and trifles to be considered, Mary Kate, and little think.

"Think and goin' to dances, and runnin' around to beauty parlors; that's not matrimony!" she added darkly.

Mary Kate was now furious. She spoke with icy calm.

"Nobody ever supposed it was, Mother."

"There's many that never marry at all, and maybe will be happier in the latter end," the older woman said, remotely.

The conversation hung fire, Mary Kate looked utter exasperation at Cass; her mother looked loftily into space. The young man rose to his feet.

"I'm sorry if you feel I'm not the right man for Mary Kate," he said hilarsehy hesitant near the door.

"I didn't say that. There'll be a good deal of water runs under the bridges," Mrs. O'Hara stated. distantly, "before anything would come to anything."

"Well, nothing will ever keep me from loving her," Cass said stubbornly and resentfully.

"Oh, love, is it?" Mrs. O'Hara dismissed it lightly. "It's not all love, as she ' repeated. "There's rent and clothes and dentists; and maybe illness."

Mary Kate made an impatient and scornful sound with her tongue and teeth.

"Tut at me if you will," her mother said, glancing dispassionately at her, "but I know, and you don't."

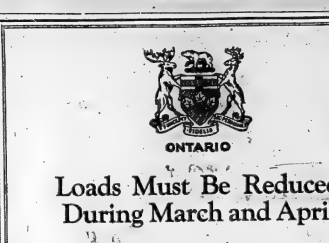
"I'll take my dears," Cass suggested mildly, at the door now, with his hat and overcoat ready. His face was pale with anger, hurt, and bewilderment.

CHAPTER VII.

With a challenging, defiant glance for her mother, Mary Kate went to Cass, and put her hands on his shoulders, and raised her face to his.

"Kiss me good night, dear," she said, gently, in the tone of a woman who makes a deliberate choice of lay allies.

Instantly, hungrily, he seized her; there was passionate gratitude in her boyish, distressed kiss.



"Listen," he began, his eyes moving over her shoulder to the stern, unrelenting face of her mother. "I didn't mean to—here's the thing—"

"Oh, don't mind Mother!" Mary Kate said wearily.

"Then you're not going to the dance?" Mrs. O'Hara asked conversationally, in the silence.

"Not now," said Mary Kate, on a dry sob.

She went with Cass to the door, returned to the kitchen, and began her pain preparations for the night. In her blue taffeta gown she stepped to the pantry, secured four empty clean milk bottles by inserting her fingers firmly into them, placed them, clattering on the laundry tubs in a sort of massage adjoining the kitchen. She took down the alarm clock, and wound it; she brought a bag of sugar from the closet, and coasted a white river of it into the almost empty sug-

Loads Must Be Reduced During March and April

Government Warning to Owners and Drivers of Trucks

The Ontario Highway Traffic Act provides for the protection of roads, paved and unpaved, during early spring months. Because moisture lurks in the foundations of the roads, the surfaces are readily damaged by excessive weights and speeds at this time of year.

What the Law Says

The Highway Traffic Act declares that during March and April, on roads outside cities and towns:

Solid tired trucks and trailers shall be limited to half a load;

Pneumatic tired trucks and trailers, with a carrying capacity exceeding three tons, shall be limited to half a load;

Horse drawn vehicles with a carrying capacity exceeding one ton shall be limited to 250 lbs. per inch in width of tire.

Speed limits all the year round are: 15 miles an hour for solid tired vehicles and 20 miles an hour for pneumatic tired vehicles of more than 8 tons gross.

Penalties are Provided

The penalty for overloading during March and April is a fine, imprisonment or both. Licenses also may be suspended. Highway traffic officers have been directed to be especially vigilant in apprehending all who disobey.

The Department of Highways desires to impress upon truck and team owners and drivers the provisions of the law. It seeks their co-operation in seeing that the law is obeyed in all circumstances. Ontario's investment in good roads, now amounting to many millions of dollars, must be protected.

ar bowl. An iron silence meanwhile spread between herself and her mother, like a cold, enveloping, rising tide.

Mrs. O'Hara's glance, automatically following the movements of her daughter, became slightly apprehensive, faintly uneasy.

"What's Cass Keating makin' now?" she asked, with a trace of apology, a certain mollifying mildness, in her voice.

Mary Kate had placed an evening lamp on a chair, a long while before. It was of dingy blue velvet, bordered with tarnished gold braid. It had been bought for one dollar at a rummage sale.

Now she picked it up, and over her bare shoulder, her fingers on the knob of the ball door, she glanced coldly at her mother.

"I don't know that it makes any difference, Mother, if you want all your children to be nuns!" she said distantly. Her hostile tone aroused a correspondingly hostility in her mother.

"They might do worse," she suggested calmly.

"You married!" Mary Kate reminded her.

"And a poor man, too," the other woman supplemented promptly.

"Well, you and Papa were happy, and you loved each other!"

"Poverty's poor food for happiness and love, Mary Kate," her mother said sadly, in a pause.

"You don't regret—"

"I'm not talking of Casimir Keating!" Mrs. O'Hara said impatiently.

"I don't know why you aren't then, Mother!"

Instead of answering, the older woman began a sort of monologue, in a dreaming, sing-song voice.

"There's no love in the world — there's no happiness in the world — can get the best of poverty and sickness. The cold shuts down as if it was a hood placed between you and the very eye of God, and you creepin' under it wonderin' will you ever stand up straight under the blue skies and feel the summer wind blowing over you again. May be the two children you have are crying, and you wouldn't dare leave without you'd have a neighbor's child watchin' them, and the third one under your heart, and weighin' you down every step you take to market.

"How's your husband this mornin', Mrs. O'Hara?' Well, it's still at home in bed he is, God help the poor soul; he feels the strength of a great weakness that'd be upon him, and will he get back to work before Monda' we the little ones is very allin' the morn-in'." She paused, her face working.

"Well, heavens, Mother, every family has those down times!"

"Many's the day I'd go into church" The older woman was merely thinking aloud; her fine eyes were fixed upon far space. She still held her widow's weeds in the dangling veil in her hand. "Many's the day I'd kneel in the old Saint Elizabeth's," she resumed bered. "And you and Mart climbin' in and out of the pew, and droppin' my purse all over the floor, and there I'd kneel, thinkin' of the little nuns—safe at home in Ireland—" She paused again, shook her head.

"You have to have a vocation, to be a nun!" Mary Kate said unsympathetically.

"And you ought-to have a bank account to get marrid," her mother capped it.

"Why don't you like Cass?" the girl demanded, on a new tack.

"Cass!" her mother asked dreamily.

"Oh, Mother, don't go off into a coma, like that! Cass Keating, that I'm engaged to!"

The fine, piercing eye pivoted about —Mrs. O'Hara looked shrough the fibers of her daughter's very being.

"Since when?" she demanded, blankly.

"You make me crazy!" Mary Kate gritted, through set teeth. She looked each speech spoke lavely.

"Well, upon my word this is the first we've heard of that!" the older woman said freshly.

"Perhaps you want the fire department to come and tell you," the girl suggested silkenly.

"I have no objections to the young man at all, but as for you marryin him, there'll be no talk of that until, he's able to offer you something more than dishes and didies!" Mrs. O'Hara remarked it firmly.

"Good night!" the daughter said, abruptly, from the doorway.

Mrs. O'Hara made no sign, and the girl watched her for a moment, irresolute. Then, apparently changing her mind about leaving the kitchen, Mary Kate walked across to one of the windows down which soft rain was still twisking and shining in the black night outside. Her shoulder set on, at the table, the dingy bonnet with its dangling veil still balanced on one big hand. Her tired kind eyes were absent, filled with dreams.

On returning home from school, Ronald, Landamore, of Upminster, Essex, Eng., found his mother and little sister dead in a room filled with gas.

THEOLOGIST IN SWEDEN STARTS A REFORMATION

To Clear Away Ancient Dogmas of the Church

(Canadian Press)

Stockholm, April 15.—A new religious reform movement, trying to foster a deepened religious feeling without unconditional adherence to the inherited dogmas of the church, is the object of a new Swedish review, "Religion and Culture," which has now issued its first number. The editor, Dr. E. M. Lindeholm, is a professor of theology at the University of Upsala and chairman of a new society, "The Religious Reform Union of Sweden," founded about a year ago in Stockholm and representing a considerable number of eminent clergymen and laymen in Sweden.

In a preface the editor outlines the aims of the movement pointing out that the religious life of today is too rich and too deep to be compressed into the old formulas and forms, which to the young generation are hardly intelligible. The new review will not be an organ for theological discussions. Theologians but a forum where all deeply religious people can meet. The hidden reserves of religious feeling must be uncovered and contribute to a new and healthy reanalaance of modern religion. The first condition however, is to examine critically all the new and new results of theological research and the development of the dogmas and, besides, to acquaint the readers of the review with the international work carried on in this field.

The final aim will be to unite religion and modern culture, since any scientific curiosity survived, and conquered only due to its being a religion of culture. If a synthetical philosophy based on faith, knowledge and ethics and elaborated, the present-day civilization as well as the present-day culture will perish, he argues.

In another article Professor Lindeholm attacks Fundamentalism, the grand dogmatic theological section which would not approve of the teachings of Jesus Christ, should happen to reappear in the world. He points out religion will be able to live without applying axiomatic truths found by scientists, and a religion, which clings to superstitions or poetic legends as divine truths inherited from ancient times, is doomed. The author reconstructs the simple but high ethical teachings of Jesus Christ and shows how they revered already in the first centuries of the Christian Church by zealous bishops. Christ never taught that he God's special son or the necessity of believing in divine Trinity and the whole complex of ideas, sufferings and death on the cross—as a means of helping mankind to eternal bliss—was just as strange to Christ as to modern religious feeling. The ritual, developed in the long run by ancient priests, was never the principal thing, but the official road to salvation became mythological instead of that of doing good, which is essentially religious.

"The Reformation of 400 years ago swept away many of these superstitions but many still remain. Our times again require a new reformation clearing away all these false remnants of the past and creating a new religious feeling, which will give real sense and contents to life." Dr. Lindeholm asserts.

The choir under the direction of the organist Miss Mildred Elliott rendered two pleasing anthems :"The Bread that was broken for Me," and "He did it with His rain." Miss Annie Elliott sang the solo part in the latter one very sweetly. Holy Communion was solemly dispensed by Rev. Joblin assisted by Messrs. A. W. Garrison and John Pauley. .....

POTTER SCOUTED BELIEF IN SIN

Says Humanism Has Got Pastors Out of Rats

New York, April 13—Dr. Charles Francis Potter founder of the human ist movement in religion, held his pastorate today as heavy cross-examination by Columbia students on questions of religion and morals at a religious symposium in Earl Hall.

When Dr. Potter's theory of humanism had delved deep into theology and morals, many of the questions put by the undergraduates. Dr. Potter frequently substituted them with an emphatic "Yes," "No," or "Certainly not." The questions he considered worthy of more extended comment usually received answers which the pupils had not expected.

"I am not going into the image business because we don't pray."

Another student demanded to know if Dr. Potter was the high priority of humanism, and if he was not, who was.

"Humanism is a trend, a tendency of attitude, and emphasis," Dr. Potter replied. "I am not the author."

Humanism's chief contribution to religion, Dr. Potter pointed out, was Other student, has come out of the Humanism's chief contribution to religion, Dr. Potter pointed out, was other student, has come out of the it has provided the dissenting clergy. Many pulpits and ministers in the New York City alone have condemned him from the pulpit, he said recently, but a good few of them "get them out of ruts." he declared.

Dr. Potter makes Christ supreme among the world's great religious leaders. Questioned on this point, he said:

"I am not so sure He is supreme." Dr. Potter responded. "You depend on miracles for the criterion, but miracles are not the criterion. I tell bigger stories about him. Christ was a theological enigma who was discovered by St. Paul and added to by evangelists."

Questioned on the difference between Christianity and Judaism, he said.

"Christ allegedly reformed Judaism, but I'm not so sure that it is reformed. The canonical literature of Judaism written during the captivity before Christ's coming contained much of the material of Christianity. That shows that even if Christ had not come, there would have been a considerable ethical development without him."

OTTER LOST IN TOWN LIMITS

Campbellford, April 12—George Richardson, game inspector for this district, has in his possession the hide of a fine otter which was killed on Sunday. The animal was discovered on Saturday by some boys in the vicinity of Mr. Thurrowgood's residence, in the northeast corner of the town. The boys, accompanied by a dog, chased the animal which sought safety in a drain. On Sunday it again made its appearance, and on being chased by a party of boys the animal showed fight. The boys then killed the intruder with clubs.

Mr. George Richardson, the game inspector, on being informed of the incident, identified the animal as an otter, and taking possession of it, removed the hide, which is worth in the neighbourhood of $50.00. The pelt will be turned over to the Fish and Game Department at Toronto.

The animal measured about 3 feet 6 inches from tip to tip, and weighed approximately 30 pounds. How the animal came to stray away from its natural haunts is a mystery.

ELINOR GLYN tells the women of BELLEVILLE

HOW to hold a husband's love—keep romance in marriage—that is the problem put up to me constantly by innumerable wives.

Can it be done? Fortunately the answer is yes. How? By being always feminine—charmingly, colourfully, daintily feminine.

But first of all you yourself must feel your own daintiness, womanliness, before you can impress others.

One of the surest ways for a wife to gain perfect confidence in her dainty, lovely femininity is to wear charming lingerie and negligees.

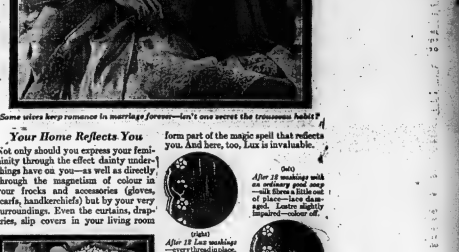
Wonderful colours, soft, shimmering materials, lace-edged underthings! They just make a woman believe in herself—feel her inherent charm as a woman.

If a woman but keeps all this loveliness at its very best—as beautiful as when it came, new, from its tissued box, she is captain of her fate—invincible.

Because she believes in herself she makes others believe in her. Confidence is contagious.

Keep Colours Charming

But, women tell me, it is so difficult to wear lovely underthings always and keep them looking fresh, as colours and daintiness when they were new. Frequent washing (and we must be dainty) takes some of the lovely colour and charm out of the garment.



To this I reply, that is too often the case, but it need never be so if women faithfully use that indispensable product, Lux—which is made especially to cleanse without disturbing the vibrant loveliness of the colours. If a garment is safe in clear water alone, it is just as safe in Lux.

Same wives keep romance in marriage forever—isn't one secret the trousseau habit?

Your Home Reflects You

Not only should you express your femininity through the effect dainty underthings have on you—as well as directly through the magnificent colour in your frocks and accessories (gloves, scarfs, handkerchiefs) but by your very surroundings. Even the curtains, draperies, slip covers in your living room form part of the magic spell that reflects you. And here, too, Lux is invaluable.

FIRE DESTROYED PETERBORO BARN

Peterbrough, April 13—Fire of unknown origin yesterday completely destroyed the barn and outbuildings on the farm of Joseph Tully, who resides between the second and third lines of Douro, five miles from Peterboro. The fire was first noticed about one o'clock when Mr. Tully had gone to the barnyard to water cows. Coming to the barn he smelled smoke and on investigation he found a burning on fire and immediately set to work to get the horses and cattle to the stable below. Neighbors quickly gathered and they succeeded in getting out the horses and cattle before the flames made their efforts on the barn.

The remainder of last season's crop was destroyed together with one sow and thirteen little pigs, sealer, seeder and a car.

A DEAN OF THE PAPER CRAFT

O. C. slackadar, dead in Halifax at the age of 83 years, was a notable figure of gallant days.in Nova Scotia and of a big-hearted newspaper man.

He was born on his father's paper when Joseph Howe held the provincial House spellbound with his glorious periods; an intimate of the copy boy Fielding when the future Minister of Finance drew $3 a week on the Halifax Chronicle; a fiery critic of Tupper and Thompson in the glories of their youth, the story of his life and of his paper is romantically mingled with that crash of statesmen which is New Scotland.

The paper was the Acadian Recorder. The second oldest newspaper in Canada. It first saw the light two years before the battle of Waterloo. For nearly a hundred years the Blackadar family has been associated with it.

Fighting Liberals of the old school they used its editorial pages as a bludgeon for their political foes but always without rancor or gall. And it is a tribute to C. C. Blackadar's quality as a newspaper man that many of its warmest friends in Nova Scotia were Conservatives.

Today the Recorder is one, of the quaintest sheets published on the Continent. It sticks to the type and the make-up of 40 years ago. In that style it was an institution in Halifax and even today its four pages pubnished every evening are eagerly awaited by many of the older generation.

But the story doesn't end there. For 50 years it has paid no dividends. In fact during all that time it has been run at a big loss. But all the members of the old staff who have weathered the years have been kept on its pay roll Every Friday they have received the same rates of pay as their colleagues on more prosperous city papers.

The possession of a moderate fortune enabled C. C. Blackadar to put in better than 50 years of loyalty and consideration for those who served him. And it is but one example of his generosity. Dozens of Halifax institutions in need of funds acclaim him as their quiet and unassuming benefactor. Years ago his lifelong friend Fielding offered him a senatorship and he twice refused the post of Lieutenant governor of his province. He died without title or degree but he born to the grave those laurels of life-long, unswerving public service which must long remain green in the memory of his countrymen.

MAYOR WILSON RECIPIENT OF NOVEL SHIPMENT

GANANOQUE, April 11 — In a local express office is a shipment of 2,002 spongoes, and on the desk of ex-Mayor W. J. Wilson is the receipt for over $200, an express bill for $11.50, and a Customs notification that he owes the Receiver General of Canada $30 for duty. When his information is received "Billy" was dumbfounded. Of course, he had been in Tarpon Springs, Fla., whence the shipment came, having been sent South by the town on a pleasure trip as a reward for his many years of faithful municipal service. He had registered at the Customs office of Commerce there and had purchased 600 sea shells to present to the children of Canada and a Customs official there overpressed sponges. Anyway, 2,002 were already in transit before he found out his mistake he had ever made.

Inquiry revealed the fact that some of the sponges were on the south shoot the same time, had ordered the sponges. The firm supplying town had lost the name and address of the purchaser, and so they consulted the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce as to any likely purchaser from Canada. W. J. Wilson was the only Canadian who had registered! sponges, carrying charges and customs levies were wished on him. He pleaded innocent and awaits developments. Meantime the sponges, far removed from their Florida Everglades, will remain in an express office in the banks of the St. Lawrence until the rightful owner puts in a claim

MYSTERY PEAKS ARE EXPLORED THROUGH ROCKS

Strange Plants and Animals Brought Back By Expedition

12000 FOOT GORGE

Washington, April 13—Dr. Joseph F. Rock, leader of the National Geographic Society's expedition to unexplored areas of the China-Tibetan borderland, has returned to Washington, with a noteworthy collection of plant and zoological specimens and remarkable photographs of lofty snow covered mountains which have been the subjects of much geographic speculation.

Dr. Rock is the man who braved tigers and wild elephants to locate the trees which yield chaulmoogra oil, used in the treatment of leprosy; later found aboriginal tribes in West China speaking pre-Sanskrit Aryan tongues, and obtained for the Library of Congress a set of the Tibetan classics from the Buddhist monastery at Choni before it was destroyed last year.

On his latest expedition Dr. Rock devoted his first year to exploration of the majestic Konkaling snow peaks, northwest of the semi-independent Lama kingdom of Muli in the Tibetan Province of Szechwan.

Rarely Female Foreigner.

These peaks had not previously been visited by any foreigner," the National Geographic Society stated today. "They are situated in the territory inhabited by Tibetan bandits and the menace of these bandits has made the area too perilous for exploration. For more than twenty years not even the natives have circumnavigated these peaks, although, because these are sacred mountains it is considered highly meritorious to walk around them.

"The expedition explored the peaks on two different occasions and crossed among them once. This was done, with the aid of the Muli chiefs, who had friendly relations with the bandit chief of the lofty stronghold. The bandit chief detailed his own men to escort Dr. Rock among the mountains, and this escort was supported by a small guard assigned to the expedition by the Muli chief.

"In the Konkaling area he has traversed the gorges of the Shou Chu, a river whose mouth only has hitherto been known. For eleven days the expedition followed this river to its source.

"Mystery" Mecnia's Photographed

"Last year Dr. Rock explored another region of Southwestern Szechwan, where he was the first civilized man to see at close range, and photograph, the lofty Minya Konka peak, which has so long been a geographic mystery.

"Dr. Rock proceeded over high passes, reaching a point within 'spitting' distance of the top of Minya Konka, and brought back many photographs taken at distances ranging from four to twelve miles.

"In the vicinity he pursued his primary work of collecting botanical and zoological specimens.

"Minya Konka is surrounded by a number of lofty peaks. All of these have one the explorer found to have local names and which, in many cases, are many thousand feet above sea level. Among these, Dr. Rock named the Crossover Peak for the president of the National Geographic Society.

New Rhododendrons

"Dr. Rock also explored territory between Muli and Tatsienlu, a large stretch of country hitherto unexplored either from a botanical or geographical standpoint. He followed the gorges of the Yalung River which, in this place, are 11,000 feet deep.

Among the mass of valuable scientific data and specimens of great geographic interest brought back by Dr. Rock are about 30,000 plant specimens he collected. Many of these are rhododendrons, of which he collected.

While he was in the field he shipped back seeds of 173 species of rhododendron not previously introduced into America, and in addition many other ornamental plants, both herbaceous and woody.

MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE ONCE WORKED FOR $5.00 A MONTH

Interesting Story of Early Life of Good Natured "Billy" Euler

Probably the greatest human paradox in Canada right now is the Hon. W. D. Euler, Minister of National Revenue, with a personality that makes him universally popular as an individual, he administers a department that makes him universally unpopular as a public official.

With people in every part of the country, in every walk of life, who have worked hard to accumulate a few dollars of savings, Mr. Euler is about as popular as a dentist is to a small boy. For like the dentist, Mr. Euler has to do a lot of painful extracting, from subjects who are just as unwilling in the art of groaning as the average small boy.

In the next few weeks Mr. Euler will operate on Canadian tax payers to the tune of about fifty million dollars. And almost every one of this will carry a left-handed blessing to the powers-that-be.

He's Good Natured

However, once the operation is over no one pursues his grudge very long against "Billy" Euler. It is recognized that somebody has to be done by some one, and the present Minister of National Revenue is perhaps better fitted for it than most men, because he has a disposition that enables him to take this kind of abuse good-naturedly.

Mr. Euler has taken undeserved scoldings almost as far back as he can remember. He likes to reminisce about some of his boyhood troubles. One of the stories goes something like this:

In his boyhood, Mr. Euler lived in the little country village of Comestogo, which is situated about eight miles nor h of Kitchener, Ontario. At the re carry age of twelve years he took a job with a farmer in the neighborhood at a hired man! For the princely sum of five dollars a month he had to mi k, plow, saw wood, feed stock, carry water and do all the multitudinous chores that keep a hired man busy from dawn to sunset—and after. It happened time this work was greatly increased.

Finally, to cap the season's efforts, came threshing time. Billy Euler was given the job on the straw pile, keeping the things cleared away around there. After working about sixteen hours in a constant storm of flying husks and straw, which went down his neck and with every crack and crevice of his clothing, he wearily dragged himself to bed. On undressing he carelessly threw his trousers across his trunk, as he wanted no time in going to sleep, as he knew he would be called at about half past four in the morning. In order to get the chores done before starting another gruelling day on the straw pile.

Next morning, about ten o'clock, the farmer's wife came across the barnyard to where Billy was working. She had the light of battle in her eye. She wanted to know from the future Minister of National Revenue what the big idea was of throwing chaff behind his trunk. Billy, remembering how he had disposed of his trousers the night before when going to bed, explained that it was an accident and that probably the chaff that had collected in his pockets the day before had trickled out and onto the floor. As it fell behind his trunk he had not noticed it. No apology would do, however, the irate lady insisted that he come to the house and remove the litter immediately. Her husband backed her up. Billy could work later that night to clear away the extra straw that would collect during his absence.

Packed His Trunk

Then Billy exploded. He told the farmer and his wife just what he thought of them. A man's work, a boy's pay, poor board and overtime had been one enough. This was the one straw too much. He quit right then and there, went upstairs, packed his trunk and put it on his back and carried it three miles to his home!

History does not relate how the farmer got his threshing done without Billy's help. Billy got another and better job. He hired out to another farmer at $6.00 per month!

"Of course," adds Mr. Euler, "an unmarried man could get along on $6.00 a month and board in those days, because there was no income tax to pay!"

REAL HIDE-BOUND PARTYISM HERE

A few days ago Senator Geo. P. Graham of Brockville celebrated his 71st birthday. Mr. Graham was born in Erinville, Ontario, and the story goes that while playing around the Bonnechere River one day, he fell in. He was saved by a north side resident, who was a hide-bound Tory of the old die-hard school. Many years afterwards, the Hon. George P. Graham, as Minister of Railways and Canals in the Dominion Government, returned to Eganville to speak on behalf of a government candidate in South Renfrew. Next day the north side Tory was asked if he had crossed the river the night before to hear Mr. Graham. "I did not," he said, "but, you should have," the friend intimated, "Seems to me you saved him from drowning one time, so you should be interested in him." "Interested," snorted the north-sider. "Interested! If I'd ever dreamed that he was going to be such a notorious Grit, I would have let him drown." We don't know whether the Senator ever heard this story, but if he didn't here it is. It was quite a yarn around Renfrew in the old days.

HOTEL AIR TAXI VOGUE IN PARIS

Two Planes Are Designed For Quick Flights About the City

Paris, April 12 —Two "air taxis" were placed at the disposal of guests of a fashionable hotel here today. One is a four-seater, while the other accommodates only three passengers. They will be available at any daylight hour for hasty flights over Paris and suburbs, to Le Bourget aerodrome, Brussels, Berlin or any of the various French aviation centres, such as Deauville, Le Touquet, Biarritz or Cannes.

Americans who miss the boat train for Cherbourg, or who prefer to travel by air between Paris and that port also may take advantage of this service.

Those hiring the smaller plane will pay 9 francs (36 cents) per kilometer (.621 of a mile). The charge for using the larger plane will be 11 francs (44 cents) per kilometer. If both rates are flat, regardless of the number of persons who charter the plane. Each passenger is permitted to carry twenty-two pounds of baggage.

The management of the Hotel George V, which is operating the air taxi service, said passengers must pay the round-trip fare from Paris even though they may not make the return journey. Among charges of $8 a day for the three-seater and $12 daily for the larger plane is the rate fixed.

Thus the air taxi's round-trip fare to London will be about $75 per passenger, which is very little more than is charged on the large airplanes of the commercial airlines.

SLUMS OF BIG CITIES STUDIED

NEW YORK—Characterized as "one of the greatest reservoirs of future building activity for the country," the slums of the big cities of the United States are to be the objective of a plan which the American Construction Council will consider at its conference here on April 25, E. M. Craig, of Chicago, president of the council, announces. Such a nation-wide survey of slum conditions has the approval of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, honorary president of the council, Mr. Craig said.

Mr. Craig stressed the ultimate social and community values of such a program, envisaging benefits to activity not only in the construction industry, but in allied lines that would "serve as a stimulus to the permanent building program of the country."

Havana, Cuba, will hold an international sample fair in May.

PICK ATHLETICS TO WIN PENNANT

World's Champions Heavy Favorites to Repeat in American League

New York, April 12—For the fourth consecutive year, the boys who peer intently at the proceedings through the wires screens that set forth the pre-season baseball verdict, there is just one answer as far as the American League is concerned—that the Philadelphia Athletics will win again and probably do it hands down.

Exactly 60 of the 65 major league baseball writers and sports editors, who responded to the request of the Associated Press for their opinions have selected the Athletics to make it two in a row. The remaining five, taking a long shot at the advance dope, named the Yankees to stage a comeback and pick up the pennant-winning habit where they left off in 1929.

The A's are the nearest thing to a unanimous choice in the four-year record of the Associated Press consensus. Last year, 53 out of 60 picked the Yankees to win and later regretted it. In 1928, the New Yorkers were the choice of 43 out of 49 critics. This is the first time the Athletics have been favourites since 1927 when Connie Mack's colorful assembly of Cobb, Speaker and Wheat failed to produce the expected results.

This is the order of finish that the baseball experts took for this year in the American League; Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, Washington and Boston.

The most improved clubs in the league, on the basis of the balloting are the Detroit Tigers and Chicago White Sox. Each is regarded as a long shot contender by the critics. Nevertheless, the majority opinion is that the Yankees and Cleveland Indians, finishing second and third last year, will furnish the world's champions the keenest opposition of any entries.

"Any club with such pitchers as Crowe, Earnshaw and Walberg, plus hitters like Foxx, Simmons, Cochrane, Miller, Haas and Dykes will be tough to beat any day in the week," observed one of the experts, in summing up the case for the Athletics, "this seems to represent the majority opinion.

BRANGWYN MODEST; LIVES VERY QUIETLY

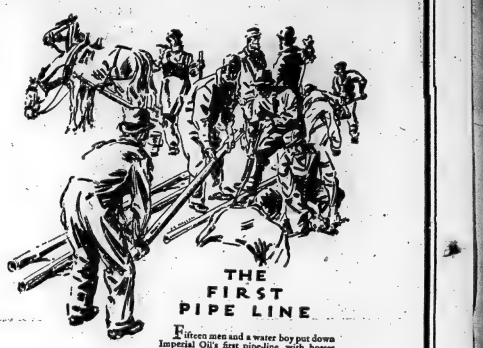
LONDON, April—(C. P.) Frank Brangwyn, R. A., noted British decorative artist, whose series of pictures for the redecoration of the Royal Gallery in the House of Lords were recently rejected by a committee of the Lords on the ground that they were not suitable, spends most of his time at his little home in Ditching, Sussex, according to a writer in the "Daily News" who says:—

"Mr. Brangwyn is guarded by a faithful housekeeper who will not permit anybody to cross the threshold. He is too modest to want anybody to see him and many have made frequent though vain pilgrimages to the London studio in the hope of catching a glimpse of him.

"If they did perchance meet him they would probably not realize that it was he. Once an artist assistant who was called in to help saked where he was leaving who was like himself, perched on the high ladders.

"Brangwyn," He was told.

"That little man," he exclaimed, "with the big pipe."



TRAINING CENTRES FOR YOUNG CRIMINALS

London, April 13—As part of the scheme to reclaim young criminals the Prison Commission will establish a series of training centres, the first of which will be at Nottingham where men of a special class between the ages of 21 and 30 will be sent. The aim will be to train each man in the work for which he is best suited, and men will work eight hours a day.

Speaking of the scheme an official of the Prison Commission said in an interview: "probably we shall attach some of the men to the building parties and engineers. There will be payment training, and in the evenings educational pursuits."

Further the official said: "Criminals will not be sent to the training centre direct by order of the courts, but will graduate from the prison to the training centre."

FIFTY YEARS OF CONSTANT ENTERPRISE

THE FIRST PIPE LINE

Fifteen men and a water boy put down Imperial Oil's first pipe-line, with horses going ahead to plough a furrow. The line carried oil from the wells at Petrolea to Imperial's refinery at Sarnia, sixteen miles away.

Imperial has many hundreds of miles of pipe-line now, ranging in size from the original three-inch pipe to huge trunk lines, bringing oil from many fields.

There are Imperial pipe-lines from the mid-continent fields. There is the network of Imperial lines through Turner Valley. There is the pipe-line Imperial put through the steaming swamps of Central America from the coast at Cartagena where Imperial's own tank ships wait.

The pipe-line system of today tells the story of Imperial Oil's search across the world to establish dependable sources of supply for Canada—of Imperial Oil's growth during the fifty years since the company began.

From one small plant at Sarnia to six great refineries — nine thousand men — stations in every corner of Canada—tankers on the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Inland Waterways—laboratories—Arctic caches—derricks under a tropic sun—long miles of speeding tank cars.

Imperial Oil has met each new need of industry and transportation with fresh effort and constant enterprise. It has grown because people have learned to buy Imperial products of service and value.

BANKING TALK WAS APPRECIATED

Mr. T. J. Tilley accountant in the local branch of the Bank of Montreal was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the Y Men held in the Y.M.C.A. last night. Mr. Tilley gave a concise and illuminating talk on the principles of banking which were greatly appreciated by the club members. Under separate headings, Mr. Tilley discussed each phase of the business, commencing with the opening of savings accounts, and in speaking on this point he said that banks discouraged the practice of issuing cheques on savings accounts. He explained the assistance that can be rendered by the clients to the staff in signing the name to cheques identical with the original signature left by the bank when the account is opened. He explained the significance of "Reserve and Order Cheques" and pointed to the fact that over one hundred and fifty million dollars was lost annually through fraud and theft in the United States. He explained that Travels are forced to exercise extreme caution in accepting cheques as they are liable in case the document is not honoured. He referred briefly to the value of interest in the borrowing of money and the importance of temporary loans.

"Loans must be repaid in a minimum time and the client must discuss the matter of securities thoroughly with the Manager before any action is taken," Mr. Tilley observed. "Sometime tangible which can be easily bought and sold is required as security while the Banks are prohibited from accepting real estate as collateral." SAYS SOUP EXPLODED NEIGHBORS SAY GAS

DETROIT, Mich., April 15.—(CP)—Alex. Sutherland's wife was away and he had, his big chance to cook up a mess of fiery hot soup, full of pepper, of the kind he always yearned for but which his wife denied him. He used a lot of cayenne and other peppery ingredients to put the desired warmth into the soup, and, full of pleasant anticipation placed the raw material on the stove and struck a match. A few minutes later, neighbors flicked Mr. Sutherland out from beneath the kitchen table, amid the tangled mass of wreckage that was the Sutherland kitchen. "Soup—too hot—must have exploded," murmured Alex when he re-covered consciousness. It will be some time before neighbors can fully persuade him that the explosion was caused by escaping gas, and not good fiery hot soup.

JOHN HINCHCLIFFE

WALLINGFORD, April 14—(By Mail) On Sunday afternoon, April 6th, Wallbridge Church was filled to capacity with relations, friends and neighbors who came to attend the funeral of the late John Hinchcliffe who passed away at his home at Wallbridge on Saturday afternoon, April 3rd.

Mr. Hinchcliffe had been in failing health for nearly a year but was able to be around the house until a month ago, since then he gradually weakened until the end came.

Mr. Hinchcliffe was born in Trenton, N.J., U.S.A. on Feb. 9th, 1850, and had thus attained the ripe age of 80 years which date was celebrated very quietly last winter, when by, a lad, he with his parents, the late Mr and Mrs. Wm. Hinchcliffe moved to Cashel Township in the northern part of the Hastings County, where they cleared the land built their cabin, erected the first frame barn in that township and owned the first lumber wagon in the district.

In June 1875 he married Miss Sarah Kemp and for fifty five years they worked together building up their home and rearing a family of four boys and one adopted daughter, who are now mourning the loss of a kind and loving husband and father. The sons are William of Saskatchewan, James A., and Edward T., of Wallbridge and Bert of Moloon, Manitoba. The daughter is Miss Laura Hart of Belleville. Thirty one years ago Mr. Hinchcliffe moved to Sidney Township and settled on the Fifth Concession on the farm now occupied by his son, James and Mrs. Green, McCullough, carried on Scripture, Hymn 218 and closed with the Lord's prayer in unison. Proceeds were $42.90.

Huge Locks are Swung Open for The First Time

Pleasure Will Start North On Trent-River Early In May

TRENTON, Ont., April 14.—(Special)—Lock-keepers on the Trent Canal have been busy for the past few days preparing for the opening of navigation on this wonderful scenic water system, and much paint is being used in making the various locks presentable after the long winter. Several of the huge gates were swung ajar yesterday for the first time since late last fall and all seemed to be in perfect working order. As yet, there have been no boats through any of the locks this year, but some are expected about the middle of May, which is usually the time the first ships pass through. The Trent Canal runs through some of the most beautiful scenery to be found anywhere in Canada, and every year more motorboat parties and yacht parties are making the trip from the Bay of Quinte north.

Terriers Outwit Big Police Dog

Prankford, Ont., April 15 (Special)—The fact that brains can triumph over brawn was ably proven by two small terriers on the main street here yesterday afternoon, when they finally managed to hoodwink a large police dog out of a juicy bone, thrown to him by a butcher. Hardly had the police dog started to make a meal of the bone that one of the small dogs grabbed it from under his paws, and started down the street at full speed, with the big fellow after him. Terrier number one dropped the bone, and while Mr. Police Dog administered a well deserved cuffing to the terrier, Terrier number two grabbed the bone and ran down the street with it. This was repeated thrice, until finally one of the small dogs slipped up an alleyway and disappeared with the bone, no doubt to meet his confrere at an appointed spot.

A large number of softball enthusiasts are expected to attend, and the full ten team league will likely get under way in the near future. Tonight there will be a meeting of the Bay of Quinte base ball league executive at the C.P.R. Freight office at which a schedule will be drawn up. It is expected that the League this year, which is affiliated with the O.B.A.A. will be composed of Trenton, Belleville Alemite, Point Anne, Picton, Tweed and Desoronto.

Hagerman, of Stirling, who died at his late residence here last Friday, was held yesterday afternoon from St. Paul's United Church with interment in Stirling Cemetery. Mr. Hagerman was eighty-two years of age at the time of his death, and had been in ill-health for some time. The funeral service both at the church and the grave was conducted by Rev. Rowland of St. Paul's Church. Deceased is survived by three daughters and one son, they being Mrs. Fred Jelfs, Mrs. J. Cummins, Mrs. C. White, and Wilbert of Rawdon. He was a retired farmer and had lived at Stirling for several years.

Consecon, Home of Fishermen

TRENTON, Ont., April 15—(Special)—The Fishing Industry will be booming along the shore of Prince Edward County near Consecon within the next few days, and already most of the fishermen who work there most of the summer have arrived, ready to start as soon as their nets can be laid down. The Consecon and Weller's Bay fisheries are among the best known on Lake Ontario, for the lake trout are usually to be found there, and for many years past the fishermen have reaped a rich harvest. Several local fishermen left for the fishing grounds yesterday.

Shooting Fish Is Contrary to All Game Laws

...Trenton, Ont., April 15 (Special)—It is contrary to the Game and Fisheries Act to shoot fish at any time of the year, and this practice is being carried on by several fishermen in this district, an example will be made of anyone caught so doing by the Game Wardens. Spearing for pike and suckers is allowed during the months of April and May, but not with any kind of a light, and not in the waters of the Trent River, which is a restricted area. Fishermen along the bay report good luck in spearing p'ke in the marshes.

Canal Road Is In Poor Shape

Trenton, Ont., April 15 (Special)—The condition of the roads around the o'clock Point, Carrying Place and Gardenville is none too good, according to reports from motorists who have been in that district lately, several cars having become stuck near the railway bridge at the Murray Canal, where the bottom has given out of the road. Many motorists now travel west along the canal, through the English Settlement or Mount Carmel, and then meet the provincial highway a few miles west of Trenton. The road this way is in fine shape.

Spring Gypsies Make Appearance

Trenton, Ont., April 14 (Special)—The first real band of gypsies seen here this spring passed through yesterday afternoon. They headed north along the River Road, there being two large wagon loads of children, men and women, as well as several dogs. Unlike many of the modern Motor Gypsies, these seemed to be like the Old Time wanderers, with earrings, gaudy colored dresses and handkerchiefs covering their heads.

Huge Catch of Suckers is Made

Frankford, Ont., April 15 (Special)—Grappling for suckers in Crow Creek here yesterday afternoon, three anglers took out in the neighborhood of two hundred suckers. A large number of these fish came in from the Trent River all afternoon, no doubt to make their way up the creek to spawn. The pike apparently have not yet reached Frankford, for as yet very few have been caught this spring.

RADIO FANS CORNER

Let's not talk much about the reception last night eh? It was all right as far as it went but the trouble was it didn't go half far enough. One or two stations predominated per usual but we didn't have much trouble.

Tuesday night when Amos 'n' Andy and Bellew had let them be found in a plenty of action to-night with the break Andy made over the phone last night. What, didn't you hear about it? Well Andy was expecting a 'phone call from Sukey inviting her over to meet her mother and when the call came Amos answered the 'phone. He called Andy and of course Andy said very sweetly "Hello Susie 'and then realized it was Madame Queen on the other end, not Susie. Oh-oh! A-ws a-w.

Up at Six—Out all Day—Home at Eight!

AND NEVER TIRED!

Thanks Kruschen for Amazing Vitality

What a wonderful record! No wonder her friends are amazed at her vitality. And no wonder she is grateful to Kruschen which makes such energy and activity possible.

"My age is 61 years, so you see I am not a young woman. I am out all day, and expected to all weather, and have been now for 15 years. I am up every morning at 6 o'clock, and standing all day, only sitting down for breakfast, dinner, tea, until 9 o'clock at night. People often say to me 'How tired you must be.' They cannot understand when I say 'No—I don't get tired.' Then I am often asked how it is I look so well and never get rheumatism, and am always fit for work. I tell them it must be the 'little daily dose' of Kruschen Miss takes every morning. It's the first thing I do. For ten years I have taken the daily dose of Kruschen Salts and have kept well in health—never had a doctor since I started to take Kruschen. I never have a day's indigestion. People often tell me I am a marvel to stand as I do."

Thank you heartily, one of the thousands we hear about every month, where regular perseverance with "the little daily dose" has given even elderly men and women all the energy and vitality and good health of a two-year-old. The reason is clear. The six salts in Kruschen keep the system regularly and gently active in its most important daily duty! They make constipation impossible. They arouse natural proper functions in liver and kidneys. They ensure a clear blood-stream—free from all impurities—paving the way to radiant health—carrying health and vigour to the whole body and brain.

STEPHENS MAY ENTER CABINET

Premier King Reported Contemplating Pre-election Cabinet Shift

Ottawa, April 15.—There will be but little cabinet reorganization before the coming contest.

Apparently the Prime Minister has decided to face the electors with his present colleagues, enforced by an English representative from Quebec. Two of his colleagues expected to have been placed in sinecures before the appeal to the country but it is now indicated that they must swallow their disappointment and take chances with the others.

Hon. Chas. Stewart, minister of the interior, and Hon. Peter Heenan, minister of health and soldiers' welfare, it is said, had fully expected to have been placed in safe positions. Mr. Stewart wanted the chairmanship of the International Joint Commission, and Dr. King, a scotsman, or a kite poet-ician, ah-heeh will have to contest the election, and both represent very doubtful constituencies. Premier King is said to have sought quality Premier Brownlee, Alberta, to replace Mr. Stewart in the department of interior. It is said that T. D. Pattullo, Liberal provincial leader in British Columbia, may contest the federal constituency of Skeena to succeed Dr. King, if the latter decides to succeed, but Dr. King will hold the portfolio until the defeat or return of the Government: at present he is in East Kootenay campaigning the constituency.

Hon. W. H. Motherwell is in the West Indies convalescing after his severe illness. It was expected he would return to the Saskatchewan legislature-governorship but he has so far recovered as to be able to make another fight.

The Streets Will be Deserted TOMORROW NIGHT for RONALD COLMAN will be playing in his greatest All-Talking picture "CONDEMNED" with Ann Harding. At the BELLE THEATRE

THEATRE

"HONEY"

Nancy Carroll and Stanley Smith co-star in another picture that time the picture is titled "Honey" and is a mighty youthful presentation that delighted the large audiences that viewed it Saturday. Nancy Carroll is pictured in calico this time and looks just as sweet as she did in satin. Her boy friend, Stanley Smith, is perfectly satisfying to the romantic portion of the audience and sings a number of catchy tunes, among them "I Don't Need Atmosphere in Paris In Love With You" and "My Little Hope Chest". Nancy Carroll, of course, sings the last named. Lillian Roth and Skeets Gallagher once more team up and provide many a laugh. They sing "Let's Be Domestic" and "Sing You Sinners". The latest song is a specialty number that is extremely good. Other outstanding performers of the cast are Harry Green, Mitzi Green, Zasu Pitts, Joyce Howlands.

HELPER RECANTS FIRE STATEMENT

Collapses in Court When Appearing On Murder and Fire Charges

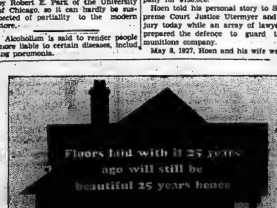
New York, April 15.—A cringing man with a mind that he said "plays tricks" on him collapsed in Brooklyn Homicide Court when he was formally charged with setting a fire in a tenement at 1,230 Dean street recently, which caused the death of four persons. He is Jerome Zeere, 23 years old who worked for $9 a week helping peddlers by day and who confessed, according to the police and Fire Marshall Brophy, to a mania for setting fires at night.

Zeere was arrested on a tip given to detectives by Patrolman Edward Crow of the Liberty Avenue station, the precinct in which the Dean street fire and several other suspicious fires have occurred recently. Crow remembered the wimened figure, a spectator at all of the fires, and recalled that once Zeere had run breathlessly up to him asking where the fire alarm box could be found.

On that occasion, a blaze at 141 Hinsdale street, Crow sent the alarm and then led the little man back to the scene. A waist paper fire had threatened to reach the staircase. Crow roused the tenants and then attempted to lead back the flames. When the apparatus arrived Zeere had disappeared.

Before Magistrate Healy yesterday Zeere repudiated his alleged confession made the night before to Marshal Brophy, the District Attorney and Captain John McCluskey.

"My mind plays tricks on me," he said. "I don't remember whether I set those fires or not."



The fourth death was a result of the Dean street fire occurred when Caterine Antignani, 10 years old, died of his burns in Unity Hospital, where his 8-year-old sister, Lillian, is still in critical condition. Their mother, Mrs. Teresa Antignani, and two sisters, Florence, 16, and Marie, 14, were buried in St. John's Cemetery in Middle village, Queens. The father, Vincent had sufficiently recovered from his burns to attend the funeral.

Zeere in Court wept and asked for time to see a lawyer. Magistrate Healy remanded him to Raymond St. jail in order to give him time to get counsel. He was charged with the murder by arson of the four victims. He collapsed as attendants led him from the court room.

WRITES BOOK ON SALESGIRLS' LIVES

New York, N.Y., April 15.—(CP)—The famous method of finding out about impersonating a fellow worker has just been given a new value by Frances B. Donovan, who took a position in seventeen New York dress stores and learned enough about girls to write a book, "The Saleslady" based on the largest department stores in the country and sold women's ready-made dresses, becoming the associate of many girls there. Her book reveals a situation very different from that of 30 and 30 years ago. Girls no longer live in attic rooms and work for a pittance. They have plenty of opportunity for increasing their wages, and of buying at low prices, and many a girl does not. In one department she is sent to another, for the modern store, having taken time to teach girls, does not want to lose them. The modern girl, who may be aged anywhere between 18 and 50, is interesting in her work, takes pride in her section, and tries to keep her records straight and clean. She studies the customers, becomes competent and sometimes "the personality saleslady". Girls are not really imposed on by men according to Miss Donovan, who sees things she men up correctly. Many sales-ladies are married, often returning to the store soon after marriage either because that is economically feasible or they enjoy business life more than home. Miss Donovan discovered that girls were able to deal with taste and to enjoy an annual vacation on what they have saved, and that their pleasures are varied and profitable. This book is one of a series of sociological studies introduced by Robert E. Park of the University of Chicago, so it can hardly be suspected of partiality to the modern girl.

Alcoholism is said to render people more liable to certain diseases, including pneumonia.

Roosevelt Approves Highway Ordinance

Albany, April 15.—Necking parties on the State highways were put outside the pale of the law today. The signature of Milan R. Goodrich, Republican of Westchester, which forbids the parking of cars on the highways outside of cities and villages—a favorite practice of those engaged in summer time romances—was approved by Governor Roosevelt.

The prohibition against this practice, long blamed for so many dangerous accidents during summer and fall, becomes effective after more than six years of agitation for its passage.

Violation of the new law is punishable by a fine of not more than $50 for the first offense.

Actor Seeking $150,000 from Remington Arms

Max Hoen Says "Dud" Bullet Ruined His Vaudeville Career

New York, April 15.—For a bullet that ended forever his "smiles" act, Max Hoen, formerly one of the most dexterous of vaudeville sharp shooters is suing the Remington Arms Company for $150,000.

Hoen told his personal story to Supreme Court Justice Untermyer and a jury today while an array of experts prepared the defence to guard the munitions company.

May 8, 1927, Hoen and his wife were doing their act at Loew's Boulevard Theatre, in the Bronx.

Hoen who admitted that it was perhaps "braggadocio" when he said he could fire 99 shots with his rifle in 15 seconds told the court that as a climax to their act he would shoot at some penny coin on a steel xylophone in his wife's song.

She sang "Smile" on the night of May 8 and when she came to the chorus he fired at the xylophone. He had reached the 59th note of the 15 when the shot failed and he believed that he had struck a "dud."

As he quickly ejected the cartridge he heard its explosion and felt the bullet strike his left eye.

Blinded, Hoen told the court that he has been unable to obtain work again. He had been on the stage since 1912.

H. W. McRobie—Brockville.

Brockville, April 15—Harry W. McRobie, 42 Abbott Street, locomotive engineer of the Canadian National Railways, and a resident of Brockville for the past 30 years, died suddenly this morning at St. Vincent de Paul Hospital.

Harry McRobie was born at Iroquois 52 years ago, and when a young man came to Brockville to make his home. He was a hockey star in his early life and for a number of years played on the leading local team, particularly in the Federal League against Montreal and Ottawa teams.

Prof John Edwards—Norwood

Peterboro, April 15—Prof. John Edwards, F.T.S.C., well-known composer of hymns and anthems whose works are familiar in all parts of the Atlantic, is dead at Norwood where for the past four years he had been organist and choirmaster of the United Church and leader of music in the public and high schools.

Prof. Edwards was born in Ardoie, South Wales, in 1870 and studied music under Dr. George Oakley and Dr. Albert Williams. He came to Canada in 1926 and after a year's residence at Niagara Falls accepted the Norwood appointment.

FATHER GIVES LIFE TO SAVE CHILDREN

Chicago, April 15.—A father gave his life Sunday that his three children might escape from an automobile stalled on a railroad track.

Everett J. Dean, 33, pushed his two boys from the machine and handed them their two-year-old brother, while a freight train bore down rapidly. He leaped and was killed just as the locomotive struck the automobile.

Tests Added to Grain Exhibition

Ottawa, April 15. (CP)—Recent decision of the Awards Committee of the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference to include a growing test in connection with the awarding of prizes at the 1932 Regina show is of special interest, to farmers and grain growers throughout Canada and in the world countries who will be entering exhibits of grain.

The growing tests will be carried out at Dominion experimental stations under the supervision of the Cereal Division of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

L. H. Newman, Chairman of the Awards Committee, states that the growing test will be impossible in connection with the World's Grain Show because entries close in April of 1932, leaving some 70 days in which some proper growing tests can be made. Only by the growing test can the purity of variety type be conclusively known, and it is deemed necessary be cause of the far-reaching effect which will attach to the sale and distribution of prize-winning seed.

It is not possible from appearance alone to always distinguish clearly the true variety or varieties of grain which may be found in even the most carefully hand-picked entries.

More than 1,400 bird banding stations were established and approximately 12,000 birds banded during 1929 in the United States.

OSHAWA PLANS FOR BASEBALL WITH 3 GROUPS

Oshawa Club Sending Their Delegates to Kingston

SOFT BALL MEETING

Oshawa, April 15—The meeting of the Oshawa City and Industrial Amateur athletic association last night officially pried off the lid of the softball season in this city for the coming summer when delegates from the various teams in the city's three loops appointed delegates for the annual meeting of the Ontario Amateur Softball Association at Kingston on Good Friday to deal with the amendments that will come before that meeting. Chief among these was the decision of the local club to vote for the adoption of the 12-inch ball in accordance with Toronto and to support the move for a change in class in the province. Oshawa's three delegates to the convention in Kingston are expected to be Art Howden, president of the local association; Harold Smith, a member of the executive and Dave Sinclair, secretary. The local association is looking forward to a banner year in softball and three senior leagues are already assured that will be sponsored by the city and industrial circuits.

At Least Three Groups

Pending the decision of the annual meeting at Kingston regarding "the senior "S" series, Oshawa will have operating this year an intermediate group composed of at least six strong teams, a junior and a juvenile loop. Softball has been ahead by leaps and bounds here in the past year through the activity of the parent association and Secretary Skeaton announced last night that should senior "S" rating be granted this city would be represented in the series. As far as can be told now, Oriental Textiles, Parks and Recreation, Oshawa Bakery, Imperial Oil Co-ops and the Daily Times will comprise the loop with the Auglicans last year's champions probably starters.

In the junior and juvenile series three teams are already entered in the competition and the executive hopes to have at least four teams in each series. In the junior, the possibility of having Whitby and Newmarket included is being mooted. All games this year will be played at the city's new ground, the Motor City Stadium. Thursday night here, the association will hold another meeting for the purpose of definitely enrolling all clubs intending to play this year.

Recreation Alleys

At the Recreation Alleys last night the Cisco took three points from the Lucky Strikes in a Ladies' Junior game. Cisco took the first and second game by enough pins to win the match. Carmichael of the Cisco team had the high single of the night with 360.

There were some good scores made in this game, 2 bowling the high total, over 900. No. 2 had two fifty singles of 527 and 564. Randle also had a good score with a single of 343 and a total of 732. John Doe also rolled a nice single of 281. For the Hardware No. 2 Doven was high with an total of 594 and singles of 253, 226 and 214. Farris had the high single for the Cartage with 283.

Legault was high man for the Cartage with a total of 677 and singles of 262, 228 and 207. The Cartage average was best with a total of 923 and singles of 306, 301 and 325.

BOSTON RED SOX BEAT SENATORS

Opening Major League Game Won in Last of Match

Washington, April 15.—The Boston Red Sox may finish last in the American League this year, but they're ruining the road, having opened the 1930 season with a hard-fought 4-3 victory over Walter Johnson's Senators yesterday. With President Hoover and numerous other dignitaries looking on from Senator Wagner's team carry, from behind in the eighth inning Monday, scoring twice off Garland Braxton to win out after the game appeared lost. Twenty-five thousand fans took advantage of perfect weather to witness the opener.

Most of the credit for the victory should go to old Phil Todt, veteran first baseman, who fashioned the winning pitcher. Smith replaced Danny MacFayden after Ike Boone respected starting pitching retired for Washington's fewness in the seventh inning. Smith retired eight Senators in order, but had to bear down hard in the ninth after West doubled with two out and Rice walked. With Goose Goslin, slugging outfielder, at bat and the winning run on first, many capital fans scented victory. The Goose crash ed three hard drives, all of them foul, and then ended the game with a long drive to Oliver.

"U" Alleys

Two more Interesting League games were rolled last night. In the first Peaches "U" Wheeler's famous five annexed four points at the expense of Doc. Edwards' trundlers.

The following were the select singles W. Wheeler 206, 276; D. Ednisp 258, 281; M. Holway 205, 248; S. Ford, 202; E. Whalen 206, 205, 214; Doc. Edwards 225.

In the second game the Ontario rolled a very poor game and let the Super Five romp home with three out of four points. Select singles were: Goodfellow 272, Shiels 272, Cater 226, Meagher 202, 268, 243, R. Hardwick 201 Eggleton 200, H. Hardwick 194, R. Cater 225.

The well known 'phone number of the Ontario-Intelligencer is 98, but dealers readers on this occasion Capt. Ben Hardwick used it for a bowling score. Another very terrible score was E. Barlow's 125. However, Mr. Barlow will probably do better next week.

The Super Five is a new Major League outfit who have demoted themselves to the Junior League. But look out you Supers for those Peaches.

Additional practice game between—B. McGuire, J. E. Dixon (2), F. Lent, Mrs. Goreline, D. Ridley, C. Keegan, C. Wilson, Bain Currie, A. Eggleton.

16 MAJOR TEAMS SEEN IN ACTION

Traynor of Pittsburg and Bell of Chicago will be Absentees

New York, April 15.—With a quarter of a million fans looking on, and millions more listening in on the radio, the 1930 Major League season will open officially today.

On the eve of the campaign, the world champion Philadelphia Athletics received a stunning blow when it was revealed that Al Simmons, star outfielder and leading hitter, is a holdout.

Simmons, who joined the Athletics this week after training in Hot Springs, Ark., said he would not play until his terms were met.

The two leading American League contenders—Athletics and Yankees — will be handicapped for the opening game at Shibe Park. Babe Ruth will be holding ground in right field for the Yanks on a bad leg.

Duke of York is Goon Golf Player

London, Eng., April 15 (CP)—That the Duke of York has erected a net around the miniature lawn at his London residence and is assiduously practising golf shots is revealed by "The London Sunday Express". He hopes that when the Prince of Wales returns from South Africa he will be able to meet the Prince on the links and beat him.

Professionals whom the Duke has consulted have conformed a good opinion of his changes of making a decidedly useful player. He has, they consider, the right "temperament" and a good eye.

Hilberto the Duke's favorite recreation has been tennis at which he has been in prior of real distinction. Last year, however, he seldom touched a racket, and he has now practically given up the game in favor of golf.

CARNERA FLOORED BUT WINS AGAIN

Oakland, Cal., April 15.—Primo Carnera, the giant Italian, hit the floor for the first time since his American invasion, last night, but got up to win by a technical knockout over Pietro Corralero, an comparatively unknown negro heavyweight, in the sixth of a scheduled 10-round bout. This was Carnera's fifteenth consecutive American victory.

Corralero, weighing 216 pounds as compared with Carnera's 276, sent Carnera to the floor during a scramble in the first round. The Italian, floored but immediately and certainly, may have received anything but an offensive fighter until the fifth round.

After being hit in the first round, Carnera fought cautiously until the fifth with the negro leading the clinches when Carnera landed up with his heavy artillery in the fifth; however, and battered the negro over the ring. But Chevalier refused to go down fighting back. Late in the round Corralero went down for a nine count and got up. Thirty seconds later Referee Toby Irwin stepped between the two and raised the Italian's hand.

Threatening weather kept the attendance somewhat far down, but Carnera's manager estimated it at 18,000.

BILL EVANS is making a record that tickles the old time clock.

And Bill, like a good sport, gives the credit to his C.C.M.

"It beats all," says he, "how easy it is to get here a few minutes earlier since I got my C.C.M.!

"I make fast time by picking the light traffic streets and if I do get in a bunch of slow-going traffic it's wonderful how easily a bicycle slips through. A C.C.M. seems to take up no room at all."

Lowest Prices in 30 Years

Bill expected to pay several dollars more for this C.C.M. than he actually did. But the dealer told him that C.C.M. prices were the lowest in 30 years. And the quality better than ever.

The dealer showed Bill all the features that made C.C.M. such a superior bicycle, so quiet and easy running, so sturdy, so smart looking. Among other things he showed Bill these

6 Points of C.C.M. Superiority

1. C.C.M. 20-year Nickel Plating
2. C.C.M. Triplex Crank Hanger
3. C.C.M. Improved Coaster Brake
4. Two Coats of C.C.M. Enamel baked on over a Coat of Rust-Proof
5. Dunlop Pedals (on most models)
6. Dunlop Tires

The dealer told Bill he would be glad to show the 1930 C.C.M. models, and to hand out a new C.C.M. Catalogue to anyone. Ask your nearest C.C.M. dealer for illustrated catalogue. A copy is also obtainable from Canada Cycle & Motor Co., Limited, Weston (Ontario), Montreal, Winnipeg or Vancouver.

The Beauty Box

What matters the color or shape of the eye if it is "full of gentle salutations and soft responses?" Numbered among the facial features, the eyes take first place, because they convey charming thoughts and tender emotions. Human sparklers are considered most beautiful, from a physical stand point, when they are neither too round or too long. The distance between them should be the length of the eye. Their loveliness is accentuated when the eyebrows are perfectly arched and lashes are long, curly and lifid.

Lean, lank ladies should not wear lean, lank frocks. They need cross lines, not too well defined. Neck lines should never be pointed, but rounded or square. The hem of the skirt should be four inches below the knee to give the body the best proportions. Freaks fairly loose to fit to conceal the angles. Tall hat crowns add to height, as does the uplifted coiffure. There is much a thing as overdoing the straight line stuff.

The double braid at the back of the neck after the Italian fashion is good style, and some of the smarties are affecting it. The hair is braided tightly, laid straight across and the ends are curled. Shoulder length tresses work out perfectly, the curly ends accenting the ears. It is still ordained that the shape of the head should be revealed.

Hand and arm massage. Anoint with a heavy cream and using one hand as a bracelet, massage from wrist to shoulder. Pat on almond meal over cream, apply cleansing bat Turkish towels for five or ten minutes. Remove cream with tepid water, dry and powder the arms with talcum. During the massage rub the cream into the cuticle about the finger nails.

Girls who are determined to carry on the sunset make-up whoopee are using a bronze shade, dark suntan, to which green powder is added. Rose has a brown that blush a slightly. Arsenic is a shade that goes the old hair one better. Only dark brunettes can use it.

At least twice a year hair that has been bleached or dyed should be subjected to hot oil treatments. Oil rubbing applied with a pledget of cotton or a small brush and left on over night. A dyed head of hair is pretty much like a piece of furniture that has been painted and varnished over again; after a time the paint must be removed, and a new start made.

If there are but a few bothersome grey hairs at the temples, they can be touched after the shampoo with mascara. Mascara comes in cake form. A small brush is dipped in water, passed over the coloring agent and applied to the hair. It is only temporary makeshift, but it serves.

Before the complexion is massaged with a heavy cream, the skin surface should be clean, otherwise dust is ground into the pores. The first cleansing can be with soap and water or a thin liquid cream which should be entirely removed. A light tapping movement with the finger tips is revivalizing to tissues and blood streams.

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Have you noticed how prints, and printed fabrics have gradually crept into the mode, until now they are of premier importance? A few years ago the very large prints were favored, last season it was the tiny ones, and this year sees both. For sports, for business, afternoon, evening you find some smart interpretation of the printed fashion.

There is nothing that brightens up your costume more, than a touch of some printed material. If you chose a suit as your Spring choice this season, you are very fortunate for you can change frequently its appearance by wearing a different blouse and you should be sure to add a printed one to your list.

Jacket frocks, in many cases, have printed materials for their blouses. Where the dress is black, the gay note is very welcome. Sometimes when a jacket is removed you find there is a printed top to the dress.

But for afternoon and evening wear, the printed materials come into their own. Soft fluttering chiffons adapt themselves gracefully to the mode that calls for flares, and all kinds of intriguing draperies, and sheep wonders are full of many lovely versions of such frocks. For evening wear, they sweep the floor, and have modified peplums and jabots and frills. Here, we find that designers have broken loose from the conventional pattern-lines for their prints, and large flower motifs, derinary executed, form a medium for the printing.

The small designs are used effectively for sports and less formal dresses. The background is often of the darker shade with light threads interwoven and outstanding. Black and white is greatly favored. There are also bordered fabrics that lend themselves well to the flaring mode.

Printed cottons are not only widely used for crisp little frocks for sports, have invaded the lingerie departments, and one finds jaunty "pjs" in gingham with plain tops, tucked-in, and wide printed trousers. Bathing suits, they say, will be printed, but that is looking far ahead, isn't it?

To be really smart this season, it seems that you just have to have one frock that is printed. And who wouldn't with such delightful affairs from which to choose?

Fashionably yours.

POEM

Lady April comes to town
In our gay new bonnet;
Skies are green, and meadows brown,
With daffodils upon it.

Ladys April's face it fair,
Sweet her eyes past telling;
If a tear-drop lurketh there,
In their blue depth dwelling.

Faith, her tears do but denote
Sunshine soon to follow;
Joy of flower, thrush's note,
Buds in every hollow.

Lady April holds my heart
Fast within her keeping;
Round, by every tender art,
Her laughter and her weeping.

Correct Manners

—Mrs. Cornelius Beekman—

The Importance of Remembering Names

Dear Mrs. Beekman:—When at a dinner, is it correct, upon arising from the table, to leave your chair standing out in the path of the waiter, or should he would not necessarily push the chair back to the table?

2. Is it proper, when introducing two people at a dance or public affair to mention the partner first names? As "John, this is Henry," or "Betty, meet Jack"? This is quite a problem with me when I have forgotten the party's surname, and I feel at a loss to ask him to repeat his name again.

VIRGINIA.

1. Leave chair in the position in which it is as you rise from it. The escort might, and probably would hold the back of the chair as you do, but he would not necessarily push the chair back to the table.

2. Such informality as using the first names in so formal an occasion as an introduction would be most inappropriate and improper. Train your self to remember names—it is quite a matter of concentration and even of visualization of the name.

And I can't let you use your own poor memory as an excuse for being unmannered. You see, introductions are important events, and they should be surrounded with an air of importance, of social significance. They have certain definite, and charm ing rules for their procedure, and these we must all know and respect. Meaning two people whom we are just introducing would not greet each other by their first names but if we mention only the first names, this is the situation that we force them into It is undignified, and unworthy of a lady. It is vastly better for you to ask for a repetition of the surname than to make the introduction simply by the use of first names. And as I say, one of your New Year's resolutions must be to train your memory for names. Go about this with determined consequence and you will find that you will conquer your poor memory.

And while we are on the subject of introductions, may I make a suggestion or two about the forms that you mention? Never, never, as I have said over and over again in my column, so important do I think it is, use the introduction-form "meet So-and-so." This is very permissable, and if you use it, you will be wondered at by people who know what's what. The perfect form of introduction of a gentleman to a lady, the form that you should use at the parties that you especially mention, is, "Miss Lady, may I present Mr. Gentleman" or "Mrs Lady, may I introduce Mr. Gentleman?" Or, more informally, the men tion of only the names, but this graciously done: "Miss Lady, Mr. Gentleman."

Also, the word "party as you use it is not in good form. Say, instead, the first names of these people, or "the person's surname."

Fix A Child's Mentality by Tests

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Ph. D.

Famous Authority on Health and psychology

We hear a great deal about mental tests and many people imagine we want to know more about them.

A mental test is supposed to be a quantitative measure of an individual's intelligence as measured, usually, in terms of years and months.

A mental test tells you what a person can do with a certain set of questions or performances.

The Binet-Simon test is the so-called Stanford Revision.

This scale calls for more questions and has a place for alternate or substitute ones. It is far superior to the Binet scale for individuals over twelve years of age.

The, there are what is known as Performances scales.

Among the best known are the Healy tests, the Goddard Form Board and the Knox Cubo Tests.

These test the individual his irregularly-shaped pieces of wood in a frame, or, as in the Knox test, by certain cubes in a certain prescribed way.

Performance tests eliminate language which makes them more valuable in examining foreigners.

They are largely relied upon in testing immigrants, as at Ellis Island, N. Y.

Such a test, nor group of tests for that matter, is infallible.

Absurdities have also been used for purposes of mental tests.

To discover an absurdity in any given statement involves rather a high degree of intelligence. Several so-called "graded series" of absurdities have been devised.

In the following statement the absurdity is, of course, quite apparent: "I have been sick three days—yesterday, today and tomorrow."

I have been sick three days—yesterday.

Likewise in this one: "The soldier waved the flag wildly in the air while standing at attention with his hands at his side."

Absurdities more difficult to detect than the above are these: "Now I will advance back to my first point." Or, "Many a sailor has come home from a long voyage to find his wife a widow."

Borderline cases of mental effect—that is, individuals who are almost normal—are difficult to discover anything dirticulous with these latter intelligence.

When we keep increasing the difficulty of absurdities we enter the realm of one of the most highly developed of all the faculties—a sense of humor.

To be able to see the ridiculous aspects of life is indeed a "saving grace."

All tests, however, should be standardized—that is, they should be tried one hundreds (if cases before it is determined what the normal response should be.

Furthermore, all tests must be evaluated by competent and trained psychologists.

Three Year Old Proves Worth at Rock Pitching

Chicago, April 15.—Joe Birmingham, the diminutive baseball pilot-and manthrower of Chicago and points west.

Joe threw a rock through a window of his home in Cicero, Mrs. Bolak did not know "little Joe did it." She blamed it on big Joe, the father and she had him arrested. When he told Judge John Lupe that his little three-year-old had done the throwing, Mrs. Bolak said that the baby could not even lift the stone, let alone heave it.

"Brink in the offspring," said Judge Lupe, "and we shall see."

The baby toddled in, walked over to the rock which was in the exhibit. A picked it up and hauled off to burl. He was aiming at a particularly attractive window pane at the rear of the court.

"Case dismissed," said the court crier—and somebody grab that rock."

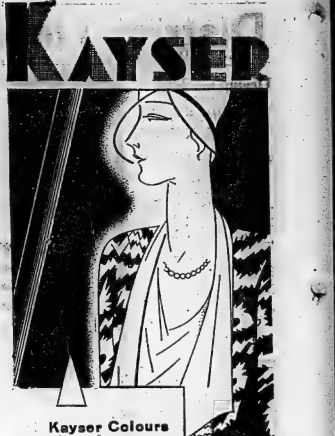
Fabrics Design CORRECT for the NEW SILHOUETTE

By GRETCHEN THOMSON

Nineteen thirty silks and cottons are presenting smart new designs especially for the longer silhouette, with pattern and spacing arranged in proportion to give the most flattering effect to the 1930 figure.

Few afternoon and evening they are printed in flowing patterns and soft tones while the new femininity demands—for daytime they display the smaller patterns usually with black or dark backgrounds and brilliantly colored designs. In both types striking new effects are achieved by the combination of print with plain color—the dress of print having hands, bows, cuffs and pockets of plain color to match the predominating tone of the print.



A whole new group of prints is reserved for beach costumes—brilliant in color and striking in design. Novelty sports weaves made entirely or partly of silk are country back this fashion and will be important in the sports mode, while stripes are seen in every manner from the shirtwaist frock to the jacket ensemble, with stripes running up or down or diagonally. Some of the most striking effects are accomplished.

Even in jersey the stripe is recognized and is most subtly introduced in self-color in diagonal effects that have been the result of the fame accorded the similar type.

No Rivalry Among Smart Bows

The tennis frock's bow gives it a good trimming in the fashion game. Every well dressed woman may have as many bows this spring as she wishes without fear of getting her duds mixed, for they are equally smart on all types of dresses. Neat little tailored bows are imposed onsport a dresses, softer loops appear on afternoon dresses, and very generous bows, particularly in taffeta, decorate evening gowns.

Here in the sketch above they are the same shantung as the white sports suit and are used on the shirt bib and at the termination of the narrow shoulder straps. The little short-sleeved jacket that attaches itself to the dress is a suitable idea for the sports enthusiast who wishes to step at the club for tea after a warm match.

Sufferings of a Housekeeper

Toronto, Ont., April 15—(By the Canadian Press)—A "Suffering House keeper" writes to the local press: I have a sign, "No peddlers or agents," on my door, but took it down before Christmas to possibly help my cheer less needy. I have five children coming in at noon each day from school for dinner, so my morning is not an idle one. I was called to the door four times one morning by agents or peddlers, three times by canvassers, and had a wee one at my heels, while I explained to two why I did not want their goods. I bought pins from one man because he was big and roughlooking, and asked another for food old man.

"Another day a girl wanted me to buy some lace, and was indignant and rude when I refused. An agent kept me at the door, as he got on the doorstep, for 10 minutes, trying to sell me a brush. All this while the cat was blowing in on my baby. He refused to leave until he spoke all his piece. Then I had to get the baby's bath, a hot one for colds and cods, many of which I could not use, my baby caught cold, some part of the dinner was spoiled or kept lat each day, and I was weary trying to get housecleaning or dusting done, because of trips down to the front door. I put a card up and there it says.

THE DANGER OF THE STREETS

The time is at hand when the streets will be becoming more and more dangerous. Belleville has had an enviable record in as far as absence of fatal motor accidents in the city is concerned but the price of safety is eternal vigilance.

Past records of safety will not save a youngster or even an adult getting in the way of a motor car. When both are careful the ideal is reached. Then they both realize the rights and privileges as well as the duties of one another.

Constant reiteration of the theme of street danger is necessary. There is latent danger. Thoughtlessness for a fraction of a second may result in serious injury or death.

Training to think in the terms of safety is needed in the day.

AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY

Hastings County and Prince Edward County are living up to their reputation as an area where market produce is grown in large quantities. The Belleville market and the markets of Trenton and Picton indicate this in no uncertain way. The development of the canning industry in these parts is another.

With this district blessed as a land of fruit and grain and garden produce, a land where grazing is possible and the dairy industry is one of intense activity, a land of minerals and metals, with Belleville and Trenton places of interest industrially, and with Picton the hub of the adjacent county, this should be a prosperous and happy part of Canada.

Agriculture will probably always remain the basic industry of this section and none could be a better one though industry and mining are of considerable importance.

Particularly with farming and industry these parts are well favored by nature and by man.

The rich agricultural section which the canning factories and the viners and loading stations indicate speaks well for the future of this Bay of Quinte section.

AN ACCIDENT—TO THE RABBIT

Little things may do so much.

A bunny crossing the highway west of the city in front of Highway Traffic Officer Rowe might have upset the officer and caused his injury or death. Instead the small animal was itself killed.

It does not require a great event to cause a catastrophe. That rabbit might have done it. Only steady riding and an unfailing seat probably saved the officer. One could even conceive of a motorcar crash from such a cause if the driver should have seen the little strip of white dart across the King's Highway.

This is an incident of life on the highway in these highspeed days. Birds, rabbits and other creatures lose their lives before and under the wheels of modern conveyances.

Highway trafficking is not an easy task with motorists sometimes speeding at high rates of speed which the H. T. O. must follow, and with cotemporaries on the one side to the other of the King's highway. Patches of oil on the road may form a danger spot which the motorcycle cop must be prepared for.

It is a thrilling life at times. The H. T. O. has an office wherein he can serve by preventing loss of life though an indication of common sense but it has its little dangers when least expected.

STREETS OR GARAGES

This summer is to see a modification of the parking rules in Belleville. Only necessity (which is credited with being the mother of invention) seemed able to force the change. If it were not for the new lower bridge which is to be constructed doubtless the change would not be made.

But it does seem that Belleville has paid a high price for its pavements when for hours after hours one car may occupy one place. Indeed the sides of the road are never used for traffic because the ubiquitous car is parked there.

The day will come when councils will have to take a firm stand on parking which means at times blockade. Present parking conditions allow the first motorist into a position along the curb the right to stay there all day but not all night. There is no reason in that. The sides of the pavement belong to more citizens than the lucky one who is the first to get to it. Police don't permit pedestrians to block a sidewalk or roadway.

Perhaps when the city tries out the amendment on parking even the motorcar will be so pleased that he will gladly surrender his squatter's rights to the place he beats the other motorist to.

Toronto, Telegram discussing the question from a Toronto angle says streets are arteries not automobile stables. That is worth thinking over.

SPRINGTIME AND CONFIRMATION

On Sunday in the Anglican churches of the city the rite of confirmation was observed. There is something so appropriate in the holding of this ceremony at this season when life in nature is young and when even the heart of those far in years is again at the springtide.

Spring has its lessons to the spirit of man and woman. Nature in her burgeoning and in her promise of bloom and foliage holds tender lessons for human beings. Man and woman are susceptible to these influences and when the ceremony of so great an organization as the church joins with nature at this time to introduce into the closest communion with the highest principle of life, the young, surely no more potent influence can possibly have come into their lives.

The spotless white of the dresses is a symbol of that purity and innocence with which the newly confirmed enter into the corporate life of the church.

Just as spring leads to summer, confirmation leads to the full membership and to participation in the vital things.

SIDELIGHTS

A SPRING LOVE SONG

A tenderer grace the earth reveals
With Spring in gentle lands,
And all of life's enchanted wheels
Glide over jeweled sands.

My spirit that so long has sighed
Upon its wintry wings,
With lovelier things I thought had died,
Wakes up and gladly sings.

Oh, never did the Spring awake
Buds of so fair a dye;
So spiritlike the mornings break
From such a radiant sky.

Oh, never did the lily part
Such chalked snow and gold;
And never did a happy heart
So dear a secret hold!

COMMENTS ON BELLEVILLE'S NEW and Greater Newspaper are varied, mostly eulogistic, some mildly critical. He was seized and taken to the police station, and later conveyed to the County Jail where he was examined by physicians. His name was Harry Robinson, who recently escaped from the Jail. SPEAKERS SET STAMP APPROVAL ON KING REGIME

Belleville District Liberals Hear Mrs. Tanner and Mr. H. Sifton

WOMAN'S VOTE

County Is Ready For Election Says Harry Sifton to Liberals

Liberals of the Belleville District settled in the recent suggestion that a federal election may be expected early in the Autumn, fired the first volley at a well-attended meeting in the city hall here last night. While it was not primarily announced as a pre-election meeting nevertheless the remarks of all the speakers hinged on the impending campaign.

Two prominent Liberal speakers were engaged in the persons of Mrs. Tanner of Toronto and Harry Sifton, son of the late Sir Clifford Sifton, for mer Minister of the Interior, during the Laurie; regime. Mrs. Tanner appealed to the women to take a greater interest on the issues at stake and pleaded for closer cooperation and support for the present Government. Mrs. Tanner a gifted and charming spokeswoman outlined the problems which face the Canadian women and maintained that it was only high moral courage on the part of her sex which would create a great national spirit of freedom and liberty.

Mr. Sifton concentrated largely on the St. Lawrence Waterways and paint ed a rosy picture of prosperity for those areas adjoining the Great Lakes should it be consturcted. Mr. Sifton claimed that Premier Mackenzie King has placed his stamp of approval on the proposed Waterways and it only remains for the sanction of the Prime Ministers of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Musical renditions by Tom Mason a solo by Mr. Jack Shirer and 2 numbers by Miss Katherine Harris accompanied by Mrs. Harold Barrett helped to complete an enjoyable evening.

President Harold Holton of the Belleville Liberal Association made a capable chairman and there was little delay in the evening's program.

Miss Annie Hurley Vice President of the Belleville Liberal Association introduced Mrs. Tanner pointing out that the governing of the country vitally affects the women, as they represent fifty-five per cent of the voting strength.

Mrs. Tanner said that she found a real spirit of Liberal cordiality in the city. She referred to the recent article on the Hon. Forbes Godfrey and said he no doubt found that the female species is always dealt with in the Psychology of Fear.

"It is the psychology of fear that has taken hold of the Liberal element in Ontario, we are slaves to a Party issue," she declared, "we have been afraid to declare ourselves and to exercise the rights of citizenship, we are afraid to lose the bread and butter with which many of our families are entangled. Men and women have suffered influenceable tortures for liberty and freedom of speech, and if we're going to win the next election we must get a new psychology. Women in politics have a larger field than in any other sphere. They have remained inarticulate," she observed, "and their thoughts have become crystallized which eventually will become sentiment and call a halt on our national and international problems."

"Women are the largest factor in the Government and the movement is gaining momentum in the Province and the Dominion," she said. Mrs. Tanner noted that a convention should be held in the Province every year to discuss the great problems. "We have delayed it too long," she stated, "and we must get together as a unit. The spirit of Liberalism should be one of Nationalism which should be cultivated."

"A little while ago we were hearing about the Empire Canada, Empire boys and girls to the United States but the influx is now into Canada due to the foresight of the Premier in passing legislation. His new tariff regime has given the manufacturers a start in the United States to come in duty free and many industrial plants have sprung up and employment given to home boys and girls." The speaker claimed that in 1922 when the Meighen Government was turned out of power, the manufacture of farm implements totalled over 60 million dollars and during the next five years this increased to forty-three million dollars. Mrs. Tanner concluded her address with a tribute to the Prime Minister on the passing of the Clemenceau Bill which she termed "One of the master moves of the present session."

A General Examination.

"The country is prepared for an election," opened Harry Sifton after a eulogistic introductory chairman Holton. "The Canadian people are free of prejudice and suspicion, and while the issues of the coming campaign are not yet known, the over throw of the old died-in-the-wool sys tem has done a great deal to increase the efficiency of the Government. Votes, from one election to another should be based on one's judgment," he averred. "There will be a general examination of Premier King's accomplishments since 1922 at the election. When he took office the Canadian National Railways had been taken over and there was a general feeling that it was burdened with debt, foreign trade showed an unfavorable balance, the tariff question was considered a bugbear and the Conservative Government, making a religion of the question had boosted it sky-high."

"Many Canadians suffered from an inferiority complex, they placed little confidence in Canadian statesmen, and if you will remember the 'Whisper of Death Articles' appeared in the Montreal Star. They thought Canada was beaten and down-trodden but that sense of determination asserted itself and Canadians were inspired."

Proceeding, Mr. Sifton stated that Sir Henry Thorton was engaged to re-establish the C.N.R., a tariff advisory board was set up, foreign and international relations were strengthened and Ministers now represent the Dominion in the chief capitals of the country.

Quoting from figures he noted that the mineral production has increased from two hundred and twenty seven million to two hundred and seventy three million dollars, while the waterpwer has increased from two million, five hundred thousand dollars, to five million, three hundred and forty nine thousand dollars. "Canada is now second per capita in trading operations of all the countries in the world. In 1922 the revenue from the freight traffic was eighty three million, while in 1929 it was one hundred and seven million."

The Liberal party should be extended a good deal of credit for assisting to turn the internal wheels of commerce," said Mr. Sifton. "The great national resources of Canada should provide unlimited occupation for the younger element." He said that in 1925 forty one thousand people migrated to the United States, in 1926 twenty five thousand, in 1927 three thousand five hundred and twenty four, in 1928 eight thousand, two hundred and sixty, while in 1929 only eighty-two people were lost to the United States.

St. Lawrence Waterway

Mr. Sifton turned to the St. Lawrence Waterways and pointed out if the project goes through, it will mean employment, for an additional seven million, seven hundred thousand men in Ontario and Quebec. "Free navigation for ocean going vessels is the key to the whole situation," he remarked. "There are over seventy miles of important work which separate the two great hives of marine activity, the port of Montreal and the Great Lakes and he stated that traffic on the St. Lawrence has increased from three to eight million dollars since the war."

"We have a Premier in Ontario who has performed a right-about-face on the whole question. He was favorable to it until the Winnipeg convention when a plank was placed in the Conservative platform virtually in opposition to the plan," he accusingly remarked. "The Liberal path has pleased itself to the construction of the waterway and Premier King is waiting for a chance to act when the two Premiers open the door."

Salvation With Liberals.

"The sound salvation of this country remains in Liberal hands and the party should be returned on their record. The national prosperity in the west have been returned to the proper hands, a close check has been kept by Minister of Finance and the Dominion is in a healthy and prosperous state."

In conclusion he said, "I hope to see in this riding a well-organized campaign and with courage and determination you can elect another Liberal."

Mr. Farley Faulkner, Secretary of the new Twentieth Century Liberal club, was introduced.

"The Liberal party in Hastings is waking up," said Fraser Aylesworth, President of the North Hastings Association. "We don't know who the candidates will be, but if it is Charlie Hanna or Bill Fraser, you will get the St.Lawrence Waterway just the same as you got the new Air Camp. It will be the greatest drawing card for Liberists in the Dominion," he exclaimed. "The Tories are sounding the anvil chorus already," ridiculed Mr. Aylesworth, "on the Robb budget which will be brought down shortly, but we shall see what their 'blue ruin talk' amounts to when it is presented."

Mayor Fraser of Trenton spoke briefly remarking on the splendid organization of Harold Holton, the new President of the Belleville club.

"There will be great problems to face," said Charles Hanna, "and locally we must weigh the important moves that both the Liberal and Conservative parties have done right here in our own riding, since the last election."

Mr. E. J. Butler, Past President of the Belleville Liberal Association moved a resolution which was seconded by Dr. J. A. Faulkner thanking the two guest speakers of the evening Mrs. Tanner and Mr. Sifton.

OLD UMBRELLA PLACED IN COFFIN

North Bergen, N.J., April 15. — Old Capt. Henry Moeller never started a charter voyage without his purple silk umbrella, and to venture on an uncharted voyage with death within the good luck piece would have been folly.

Consequently, when they buried the 80-year-old sea dog here yesterday the out-moded "bumber-shoot" with him, carved snakewood handle and all, tucked under an arm.

The umbrella was given to the captain when he first went to sea in 1865 from his home in Germany. He took it on all journeys over the seven seas and it was always with him after he became a captain of ships for the Lackawanna Railroad and later a commander of tugs for the Hamburg-American line.

LIGHTNING KILLED FARMER ON TRACTOR

Tilbury, April 15.—Howard Wickwire, 28, farmer, residing on the Talbot Road seven miles east of Wheatley in the Township of Romney, was killed by lightning while working on a tractor plowing.

His father William Wickwire, and a hired man, William Lyons, who were plowing with teams in the same field a short distance away were both stunned by the same flash of lightning. A four-year-old son of Howard Wickwire was riding the tractor with his father a few minutes before the flash and crash came.

RAN INTO ROADWAY IN FRONT OF TRUCK

Oshawa, April 15.—Seven-year-old Florence Williams, daughter of Albert Williams of Albert street, Oshawa, narrowly escaped death here Sunday when she was struck by a truck driven by Donald Minns, of this city. The youngster was playing in front of her home and suddenly darted out into the street in front of the approaching truck. It is feared the girl may have serious head injuries. No charge has been laid against the driver of the truck.

ELIMINATION OF CHIEF SOURCES OF INTERFERENCE

Experts Claim Violet Ray is Cause of Disruption in Reception

This is an age of science, and radio is the greatest wonder. With the advent of radio came interference never before known, and the Department of Marine and Fisheries of the Dominion government have done everything in their power to eliminate the chief sources of interference allowing those owning sets, to enjoy the best reception. For the past five days an interference car has been in Belleville locating the numerous causes of interference and trying in some way to eliminate the most noxious. In the five days the car travelled three city streets 49 sources of radio interference were located, and the most of them were electrical. Violet ray machines were the chief cause of disturbance. Medical men have to use their machines at all hours and it is next to impossible to secure reception with these in operation. The suggestion was advanced that physicians have their machines isolated in sound-proof boxes but this would be a personal cost of some $250 for each machine, which some of the physicians are unwilling to pay. Those proposing to use Violet Ray machines in their homes should use the hours of 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. and from 10 p.m. to 11 p.m. A small Violet Ray machine will effect all radios within one square mile.

The chief causes of radio interference are, first, live wires in contact with metal or trees; 2nd, loose connections on live wires, such as fuses, lamps, sockets, etc.; 3rd, battery chargers; 4th, all motors using commutators and brushes; 5th, some types of oil burners; 6th Violet Ray; 7th flashing signs; 8th, thermostats, such as heating pads.

APRIL ESCAPADE

The kitchen was lighted by but one light, a green-shaded lamp on the table. It was very warm. Bubbles dled away in the half-finished glasses of cream ale; rain beat gently on the roof.

There was a long silence. Then Mat tin came in, restarted with rain, tired and flabbevilled and dirty, his eyes deep in shadowy circles.

Mary Kate went to the pantry, cut him a great double slice of bread, and buttered it lavishly, placing it before him. She also placed on the table a soup-plate of honey in which crumbs and bits of butter were lodged.

"Oh, Matt!"

"Oh, Lord, no!" This is grand." His eyes went alertly from his sister's flushed troubled face to his mother's spectacular ones. "Didn't you go to the dance, Mary Kate?"

"If you'd seen what I saw, when I come back from the pitchers with the girls," Mrs. O'Hara began, in her staccatissimo voice.

"Peeping Mary surmised, with a bright, amused look for his sister.

"And Hasin', and talk of marryin'," the mother completed it sternly.

"Marrying!" Matt echoed, thunderstruck. He looked amusement at Mary Kate. "Sean Keating, I'll be asked."

"Mother," Mary Kate said bitterly, "all but threw him out of the kitchen! I never saw anything like it! What he'll think we are is more than I'll ever know."

"It's the greatest nonsense ever was in it, and you nineteen," the older woman persisted sternly.

Martin's blood moved through puzzlement to amusement, and finally became businesslike.

"What have you got against him, Mat?"

"Nothing, because nobody could have it!" Mary Kate interpolated passionately.

"He wouldn't have to be a murderer for me not to want him to run off with Mary Kate," Teresa O'Hara said with dignity.

"Well, don't worry," the girl said acidly, "for he'll never come back to this house!"

"The rootl'l stay on," her mother predicted calmly.

Martin looked uneasily at his sister, who had seated herself at the end of the table opposite him. She had plant ed her bare elbows on the darkred oil cloth, her chin was in her hands, her expression was angry. But down her cheeks the swift, unwelcome tears were beginning to fill. Mrs. O'Hara, cast one glance at her, raised her chin, continued her stony contemplation of distant spheres.

"Maybe Mother's right," Martin began craftily.

"That's right, side against me!" his sister said bolly.

The boy leaned back in his chair, her black eyes met his. Only for the fraction of a second their looks crossed then Mary Kate continued her interrupted staring into space. But her tears dried by magic.

CHAPTER VIII

"Now you hear your brother!" Mrs. O'Hara said gratified.

"Here's what I think, Ma." Martin said, gulping down flat ginger ale, "Mary Kate'd be a fool to marry a fellow like Cass Keating."

"Well, now you see," his mother said scolding, with a shrewd triumphant glance for the girl.

"Even if he was in love with her—" Martin pursued.

Mary Kate was regarding him with a placidity that scarcely surprised her mother. But then the child had always been self-possessed.

"A fellow like that doesn't know his own mind," Mart added.

"Well, now you see!" Mrs. O'Hara put in a kindly, triumphant saide for Mary Kate.

"He'd break her heart," the boy continued.

"He would, Mart. He would that!"

"What do you like about him, Mary Kate?"

Mary Kate deigned no reply. She was sitting at the end of the kitchen table her elbows on the red cloth, her chin cupped in her palms. She cast a glance of bored, magnificent disdain at her interlocutor.

"I like him," Mart confessed cordially taking an enormous mouthful of bread and honey. "But not for Mary Kate."

"Well!" Mrs. O'Hara said, in satisfaction.

"Strike it between you," Mary Kate urged them. And her kg's at her brother was a little puzzled, and a little reproachful.

"Hey, making good, he's going to be rich," Mart went on, with enthusiasm, "and it'd be a constant reputation to her that we'd had him down."

His mother's complacent, dreaming expression suddenly altered; a slightly disturbed expression clouded her fine eyes.

"How would we hold him down Mary?"

"Well a man doesn't marry his wife's family, Mother."

"How do you mean he doesn't marry his wife's family? Who wants him to marry his wife's family?"

"I suppose that what with the children to raise and educate, and me with my schooling ahead— and Tom to settle in something—"

Mrs. O'Hara's came about at her son with a flash of white, like a horse's eye.

"You mean I'd settle down and be a burn on him, is that it" she demanded wildly—too mildly.

"Oh, not a burden, exactly," Martin apologized politely, perfunctorury.

There was smoother silence, during which Mary Kate, her eyes deep in thought, her mouth occasionally twitching slightly, looked straight ahead of her, and Mrs. O'Hara mixed a cereal in her blue saucer-pan.

"The way you talk, you'd think Cass Keating was too good for Mary Kate," the woman presently said, resentfully.

"Nobody's too good for Mary Kate!"

"Well then, you're talkin' very queer, Mart."

"No, it's like this, Mother: Cass Keating is terribly attractive, see? And all the girls—girls of twenty-five, older girls, girls with rich fathers, are after him, see?"

"Now I don't say Mary Kate couldn't hold him, but I do say that he's going to make money, he'll have an automobile—he'll buy a place out in St. Francis Wood or somewhere—"

Mrs. O'Hara stirred the mixture in the pot, salted it, tasted it.

"And Mary Kate couldn't keep up with him?" she asked gently.

"Well, Mother, don't get on your high horse I'm not knocking Molly. I simply say that here's a fellow that's going to make millions, like O'Grady Brothers, or Cunningham and Company—"

The rough, expert hands that were manipulating bebiue saucepan tremb ed slightly. Mrs. O'Hara poured hot water into the lower casserole gently filled the upper one in place, pressed down the cover. She set the pan back on the stove.

"I suppose I'm surprised that you don't stand up for your sister, Mart." Her voice was level, dead.

"Mary Kate understand me!" Martin glanced at his sister; their unsmiling family significance looks met in a steady stare. Then Mary Kate dropped her eyes again.

The mother sat down at the table, a strong needle, threaded with a black thread, and a child's strap slipper, suddenly in her hands.

"In Mary Kate's place I wouldn't want him out of the kitchen," said Mrs. O'Hara.

Martin was stuffing his pipe; he made no reply.

"Are the Keatings so well thought of Martin?" the older woman demanded, surprisedly, in a forcibly restrained voice.

"Cass is," the boy said briefly.

"Is he so? It's a pity then, that he wouldn't go after one of those million-aires' daughters, Mart," Mrs. O'Hara observed drily.

"He will," Mary Kate said bitterly.

"I never said anything against him Mary Kate, all I'd said is that a daughter of mine would know her own mind, and be said by her mother and brother, that would love her more than a thousand men, however rich they'd be!" Mrs. O'Hara presently said sententiously and a little uneasily.

"That's kind of an old-country idea, Mother," Mart reminded her, pulling on his pipe.

"What's an old-country idea?"

"That a girl would let her mother and brother pick her husband for her."

"I don't know who'd love her more, that'd do it for her," the woman said.

"You and my father, now. Did your brother pick him?"

"He did not. My brother hated the very step of Tom O'Hara in the door!" Mrs. O'Hara admitted honestly. "But Tom was very different days, Mart. No, we run away. Papa and I did—"

"Well, there's your clue, Mary Kate!

Mart reminded his sister cheerfully, in a sing-song.

"That'd be fine advice to give her!" the mother said, roused to uneasiness and interest beyond her depth.

"I'd always thought I'd have a church wedding," Mary Kate observed dispassionately. Her eyes, with a dancing flicker in them, rested for a moment upon her brother.

"If you can pin that feller down to a wedding at all, Mary Kate—" Mart said hopefully.

His mother indignantly interrupted him. "Mart, don't talk that way to your sister! It's disgusting. A body wouldn't know"—Mrs. O'Hara continued, with a sharply significant glance at her son, "whether you liked him or not. Why should she run after a bad girl, and be married by a Justice of the epace in Colma or Vallejo or God knows where, with her own mother and sisters and brothers all at home, lovin' her? She may be poor, but there's no shame to that, and however rich he'd be, come ten years from now, she would be as fit to stand beside him as anyone he'd ever find, and too good for him, too, if you ask me!

"Why Cass Keating," she went on, warming, "whose grandfather ran the Sixteen Mile Tavern' down the Peninsula—"

"Listen, Mother—"

"I'll listen to you, Mart, that ought to makin' it easy for your sister, sakin' the man to the house, and makin' him welcome and her with all those rich girls pullin' against her! It's not right of you, Mart, and it does please me very cruel that it'd be her own blood-brother—"

"Now listen, Mother If you say so, I'll phone Cass tomorrow, and tell him you want him to come out to dinner—"

Olive until—well, that's all right," Mrs. O'Hara said, suddenly, restored to normal avenues of thinking and feeling, the old black frying pan and tender spit chickens sizzling within it clear in her mind. "Do that now, Mart," she urged. "I can get me dinner in tomorrow morain' if he won't join me a good order. And as for tonight," Mrs. O'Hara continued boldly, "well, I don't know that it'll do him any harm to know that we're in no hurry to get rid of Mary Kate!"

"Oh, mother!" said Mary Kate, unable to continue the make-believe longer, and rising to fall upon her knees at her mother's feet, push the sewing aside, and lay her hands behind her mother's neck, "you do like him?"

"If you like him, Baby," the mother said gently.

"I adore you!" the girl said, laughing and crying, She jumped to her feet, ashamed of her own emotion and it was out of the kitchen.

Mrs. O'Hara looked appealingly pathetically, at her son.

"The way you all have me be-deviled," she complained, "I don't know whether you like him or not, or whether I want her to marry him or book him out of me house!"

"Poor Ma!" was all the comfort Mart could give her, as he knocked his pipe free of ashes, folded the slips of green paper that contained them in to a care ful bundle, deposited it in the garbage can under the sink, and flaned his mother's daisy-white forehead, where the rich dark hair sprang away in a smooth youthful wave. He laughed as he spoke, but his mother only looked at him darkly half-suspecting, perhaps, that these too-clever children of hers were manipulating her.

"The whole lot of you's a heart-scald to me," she said, gloomily. But when Mary Kate kissed her good night, drew his dark cheek hungrily against her own. The day's work was done now; it was bedtime.

CHAPTER IX

Her own room, which little Pat shared, adjoined the kitchen, but after she had deposited her damp coat and wdow's bonnet there, and gotten into a colorless flannelette nightgown, she paddled softly in old felt slippers, to the deserted dining-room, that smelled of apples, dust and cookies, and groped about in the neighborhood of the fireplace for the old-fashioned gas-jet, on a hinged iron arm. Tom slept in this room, on an extension couch. Mart had the little alcoe of hall bedroom upstairs, and Tom usually undressed there, and kept his shabby wardrobe her and there, in all the house hold closets—sweaters in the skate and hockey bag, coats on the stairs, neck ties on a nail in the bathroom, coat on another nail, in the downstairs passage.

His mother always opened his bed for him; she had forgotten it tonight. She went to the familiar little job with a heavy heart; where was the boy, on this rainy, unfriendly evening?

But the instant the little wavering bead of light was shining, her room was inundated with sudden peace. Tom had opened his own bed; his damp clothing was scattered all over the floor his dark head deep in the sodden pillow.

His mother sagk thankfully upon her knees on the littered floor beside the couch, and put her arms about him and without waking he snuggled close to her, grunted, and sighed happily, in affectionate contient. She kissed the thick dark waves of his hair,—how good, dear, innocent boy that had been asleep in here all the time she had been so worrying about him.

"Ah, Tom, you're such a darling."

"Is it, mother?" yawned Mother."

"Don't wake up dear." But she could not let him alone. "Where were you dear?"

"We were at the Alhambra—right behind Mary Kate and Cass keeping—"

He had sunk fathoms deep into delicious slumber again. His final, "Gee I love you"—died off into inarticulate murmuring.

Mrs. O'Hara began her evening prayers her lips against the thick dark hair that smelled of rain and youth and Martin's jealously cherished "stik-tite."

Meanwhile Martin had slipped into Mary Kate's room and with exquisite privilege of brotherhood was sitting on the edge of her bed in the dark, her warm slim, young hands tight in his. Her breathless rush of confidences coming to him in eager whispers.

"Oh you, Mart, Cass and I have been very quiet—working a little since Christmas. But of course I wasn't sure And then, all of a sudden he knew we were talking about it, you know about what we'd do, and income, and budget everything! Oh, Marty, you do like him?"

"I think he's a pip."

"No, but do you honestly? And Mart, he is so much older than the others— I mean he's nearly twenty-seven, you know, and I mean he's in earnest. He's married, Mart, Mother'll be all right won't she?"

"Mother's scared to death now, for fear you'll lose him."

"Oh the way you managed her! It was marvelous."

She had to act stiff, at first, you know. She'd do that if you liked the Prince of Wales!"

Canada Remains Quite Canadian In Its Origins

Harry S.lton of Toronto Tells Rotary of Growth of Canada

THE AIR DEVELOPMENT

Canada is predominantly Canadian despite the gloomy forebodings of pessimists who view with alarm the supposedly large foreign population and the possibilities of foreign influence upon the growth and progress of Canadian nationality, according to Harry Sifton, of Toronto, guest speaker at the weekly gathering of Belleville Rotarians in the Hotel Quinte, Monday. Canada's census of 1921 gave the population as 8,000,000 Canadians born of the first and second generation, 2,000,000 British born and 800,000 foreign born, surely nothing to worry about, said the speaker. There were 4,887,000 Canadian born of more than two generations.

Mr. Sifton gave facts and figures relating to the growth and prosperity of Canada in the past twenty years, including a mineral production which had grown from sixteen million dollars in 1900 to $273,000,000 in 1929. Speaking in an optimistic mood, Mr. Sifton claimed that Canada's future held greater potentialities than any other nation. Its natural resources were greater, its climate and geographical position also lend themselves to great development possibilities. The airways of the world are now being developed and will carry a tremendous traffic in the future, in the opinion of the speaker, who visioned many airport terminals throughout Canada for the airlanes to other countries all and directly across Canada in the quickest routes. Wheat with an acreage of 24,000,000 in 1928, nevts 28,000,000 acres and in the Peace River district which will double Canada's wheat production possibilities. Development of Canada's forest wealth was outlined, the railway mileage, fish export, manufactures, water power, etc., showing the tremendous growth in Canada's prosperity and future.

Mr. Sifton painted a bright picture of Canada's future possibilities and could see no sign in this generation of any permanent setback to the prosperity of this country. He was interrupted to the cheh by Charles Cameron, with W. 31. Deacon voiced the appreciation of the members for his address. President Al Hillman occupied the chair and introduced two new members, Harold Fewby and Alfred Beard.

LOCAL MEN ON AIRPORT WORK

Will Take-- Two Years to Complete Airport in Sidney

Although work is progressing slowly at present at the airport, nevertheless it is estimated by one prominent official in charge that within a week or ten days the services of one hundred or one hundred and fifty men will be required. It is useless for labor to come in from Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal, or outside points. "We are going to employ labor from Belleville and Trenton exclusively," this official stated to the press this morning. "We won't have any trouble getting enough men to fill every job that has to be done. Both Trenton and Belleville will have a chance. Outside points need not bother sending men in. We will take care of our own first."

The ground at the proposed site of the airport has not been in fit condition for work to progress, however, and it has been practically impossible to do anything with it. However, with the fine weather now in prospect, it is hoped that leveling and grading work can be started almost immediately.

Although it will take some two years to completely finish the airport, it is hoped that a great deal of it will be finished this summer. Great piles of building tiles are standing on the ground, as well as some building sites. The latter are for the officers quarters. Married officers will have houses built for them, with stucco exteriors.

Eight hangars will have to be erected just as a beginning. These hangars will be modern affairs, capable of housing innumerable planes. It is thought that by this August some of the personnel of Camp Borden will have been transferred here and that planes will be flying. Next summer the camp should be finished.

Benefits Impel Nurse to Speak

MRS. EDITH BROWN

"I am a practical nurse but the action of this new Sargon certainly surprised me, and I'm giving this statement out of gratitude for what it did for me.

"I had awful pains in my right side and in my right shoulder joint, that extended all the way down to my wrist and the pains left my hand. Nothing I took helped me until I took Sargon. It completely overcame the pain, I notice too that I am stronger in every way with words of new energy and vitality. Sargon Pills regulated me perfectly."—Mrs. Edith Brown, 426 Clendenan Ave., Toronto.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

They spoke of the Fell street flat. The Harrisons were going to move. Mrs. Fell had relatives; she wanted a place where there were not so many flights. Her head a bank of pain, she headed shoe clerk who took her to the right department. Neil's father had had very nearly gone to jail. Granny been arrested for some labor riots and Burke was poorly. The cold this last Winter had bothered her a lot. Granny, Burke, Neil's father, on and on, in Neil's rough voice, that strange pain to which she had never consciously belonged . . .

All the time, the man's eyes were taking her in, miserably aware of the change in her. Gheezy, which Ardeth herself did not realise.

Tillie was just the eager young girl he had waylaid in the hall of the flat and mauled in his young brute-something about her which clashed him. Even her voice was changed. Speaking with Mary Eastwood had given depth to it, even the sound of reading had given depth to her mind. It was more than the quiet distinction of her clothes, a quality which Neil could describe to himself only as "class." It was something deeper. Some integral quality-though he did not put it this to himself.

He hated her now for the change which had removed her from his thoughts of her. Hated himself for holding the gulf.

His embarrassment transmitted itself to the girl. She tried to dissemble by keeping up a running stream of light comment to which he returned monosyllables.

At the door of the hotel she turned with relief and held out her hand.

"It's been so good to see you again, Neil—"

He ignored that kind little hand. His black eyes burned with wretched anger in his attempt effort to break through this wall which separated them. He burst into rough speech.

"You don't mean that, Ardeth. You've been changed. Me. That's what they've done to you. Made you ashamed of the people you used to know. You're ashamed to have you loved me once. Well—you did. You used to like it. You know you did—"

His eyes blazed in accusation. his face was white with fury. In his new, widened fashion. Neil was suffering. Her own distress sat in the girl's pale oblong of face, her hands clasped in ready shining nails; her eyes were beseeching her husband.

Even space, his voice weary— the voice of one who has gone over the same ground many times.

"Please can't we talk this over just this once more? Can't you see, Cecile? It isn't that I'm trying to dictate to you—or that I want to spoil your pleasure in any way.

"Oh, don't be so almighty sanctimonious about it!" interrupted the lady, her voice petulantly well versed in using an objection simply because you didn't want to do it.

A Fearful Row

"No, that isn't so," he returned even by. "I'll admit I don't like Coralie Gaines or that rowdy crowd she gathers around her. I don't like the way they drink—or the high stakes they play for—"

"I believe—" Cecile's smooth voice cut in, "that's only my own feeling, Neil."

Her face reddened. There was a hint of temper in his voice. "That's another thing. You know do you, Cecile. I feel I have everyone know you write checks to settle your bridge debts for more than my earnings each month?"

Cecile's lip curled. "Can you afford to pay my card debts?"

The matter eyes narrowed. "I just can't afford—"

"Then"—his wife's voice was icy. "until you do, don't you think you might permit me the spending of my own income?"

Kim's cheekbones were burning.

3 WEEKS' SURVEY FIRE HAZARD IN CITY IS STARTED

Lionel J. Bishop Seeks to Improve Protection in Belleville

BUILD ESCAPES

Some Buildings Will Have To Be Torn Down, Fire Walls Built

Mr. Lionel J. Bishop, a representative of the Fire Prevention and Inspection Department for the Province of Ontario is in the city making a three weeks' survey, with a view to bettering conditions with respect to fire hazards. Mr. Bishop and Fire Chief William Lynch are making a thorough examination of all buildings and institutions. This is the first inspection of this nature ever conducted here. Where fire escapes are considered necessary, they will be ordered erected, while fire doors and fire-wall will be constructed on some of the three-storey buildings particularly where dances or concerts are held.

Undoubtedly some buildings will have to be torn down and we are going to be particularly careful where gasoline and other inflammable materials are stored. We are here to cooperate with the business men and citizens and not to dictate to them, but unless the cooperation is given, the department have the right to enforce the law and unless it is adhered to, a penalty of $100 may be exacted under the Fire Marshal's Act," said Mr. Bishop. "We have been inspecting various types of buildings and have found new fire escapes will have to be built."

Mr. Bishop said that the Mayor and Aldermen, city officials and Fire Chief Lynch have given their best co-operation in the matter of building up a system of fire prevention here. Mr. Lewis another representative of the Ontario Fire Prevention Department made a recent inspection of the General Hospital and other public buildings.

Bennett on his return to Calgary, following adjournment of the Dominion House for the Easter recess. "The budget will probably be delivered shortly after the Easter recess," Mr. Bennett continued, "and there is much conjecture as to what it will contain. Undoubtedly promises have been made to the agriculturists of Quebec that a tariff will be imposed on fruits and vegetables, and the iron and steel producers have been assured that their industry will receive protection under the new tariff.

LONDON, April 16.—CP— Premier MacDonald left today by aeroplane for his home at Lossiemouth, Scotland, for Easter, worn in health by the long naval conference. He had a talk with the heads of the American and Japanese delegations. He will return for the plenary session next Tuesday. It has then to be submitted to the various Governments. If the Home Government approves the draft quickly, it may be signed next Tuesday. Tokyo Government may probably delay its reply, however.

GYPSIES ON MOVE

An exigence of spring and moving time was seen on Front Street this morning when a band of gypsies were noticed travelling in a northerly direction. The cavalcade consisted of an open, wagon drawn by two horses and a covered wagon with two horses attached. Behind both vehicles a horse was being led. The party crossed the upper bridge and proceeded north on the Provincial highway leading to Toronto.

WAS PERHAPS DIOGENES HE CARRIED LANTERN

Dark and sinister was the night as a wayfarer trudged his way down a prominent east hill rialto last night. Veiled discussion took place behind locked doors as the traveller groped his way along, guiding himself by the faint rays of his lantern. Who was the miscreant, what was his business at this time of night? It might have been the ancient Diogenes, the Greek philosopher suddenly resurrected. Hurried telephone calls for hubby from the office and the lodge room. Ten pairs of eyes peered from behind drawn shades to observe the progress of the unknown man. He stopped, packed his lantern and walked. The Rawson bus hove in sight and he picked up his light and joined friend wife as the latter stepped off following an evening at the movies. The mystery was paralyzed, it was only a self-respecting citizen guiding the steps of his timid spouse to the steps of their domicile.

ONE PERSON KILLED IN RIOTS AT COURT DOOR

Arrest of Leaders Made By British Authorities In India

TROUBLE AT BOMBAY

Raid on Government Salt Pans Indicated In Despatches

Karachi, India, April 16.—(CP)—One person was killed, seven were seriously injured and 36 others were hurt in rioting today after a mob had stormed the magistrate's court. Police fired on the mob and beat off many rioters with staves. Aided by Indian troops they arrested the leaders. The condition of two of the injured is serious. Grave blows and stones were responsible for the one death.

At Poona it was revealed the magistrate and civil of police were injured by a demonstrating crowd last night. The crowd had marched on the police headquarters after a mass meeting and the chief magistrate was hit several times.

KARACHI, India, April 16.—CP— Police today arrested six leaders of the All India Nationalist Congress. At the same time a riotous mob, gathered outside the magistrate's court to protest the trial of their leader. Injured two white policemen and the police were forced to fire when the mob stormed the court. The mob was finally quelled.

Rioting on the streets of Calcutta, spent itself early today after a futile attack on the presidency of the hospital to which one white injured yesterday had been taken. Two of the whites' sufferers are—women.

At Bombay trouble was brewing when 200 nationalists marched with the object of the raiding government's salt pans and depots at Wadai eight miles away.

MERCHANTS REPORT

Belleville merchants have put in a busy time this week and business has certainly improved with the coming of the Easter season. All the shops have been busy hives of industry and the clerks have not kept going every minute of the time. According to the sales made during the past week Belleville ladies should present the latest in fashionable apparel in the Easter parade. If weather permits a sunny day on Good Friday the new costumes will doubtless make their first appearance.

A UNIQUE VISIT

Mr. Bruce Jose of Detroit, formerly of this city, greeted his mother in a rather unique manner yesterday afternoon when the plane in which he was a passenger, swooped low over his home and he dropped a note to his parents. The letter dropped in the yard not ten feet from the front door. Mrs. David Jose, who resides on Coleman Street, received a very unusual visit yesterday from her son stating that he was flying from Lake Placid, New York, to Detroit via Montreal. The big plane passed over the city at 3.15. Bruce and his pilot left Detroit for Lake Placid on Sunday morning. He is well known here having been educated at High School. His many friends will be interested in the fact that he has become a keen student of flying.

COLD SPELL CONTINUES

Continued cold weather last night and today made it necessary for citizens to go back to their winter overcoats, and those who had their furnaces take a rest were glad to put them back into use. Although the sun shone brightly all day, a cold wind drove the temperature down, and registerings at the local pumphouse showed temperatures of 41-29, as compared with 42-26 yesterday.

ENTERTAINS R.C.I. TEAM

Mr. George Forman, manager of the Belle Theatre, last night entertained the boys' hockey team of the Belleville Collegiate Institute at the Belle theatre, "Honey" starring beautiful Nancy Carroll, was the all-talking feature picture and the boys enjoyed the entertainment to the utmost. This is the second time the hockey team have been entertained as a reward for the splendid showing they made in the recent interscholastic league. Mr. Forman's generosity was greatly appreciated by the boys.

WORK ON BANK ADDITION

The new wing on the Bank of Commerce building, corner of Campbell and Front streets, is fast nearing completion under the supervision and workmanship of the Paterson Construction company. The four walls of the new wing are almost completed and it is expected that the work on the building will be finished in the near future. When ready for use the building will be the most attractive of bank premises in the city. It is expected that the move from the Bridge street premises to property will be made some time in the month of June.

FOUR TEAMS IN BAY OF QUINTE BASEBALL LOOP

Home and Home Games Will Be played For Knox Cup

Trenton, Ont., April 16— (Special to The Intelligencer)—The Bay of Quinte Intermediate O.B.A.A. baseball league will be composed of only four teams instead of six as was at first thought. It was decided at a meeting held last night, Picton, Point Anne, Tweed and Trenton will be the four teams. Belleville Alemite and Centreville found it necessary to drop out owing to unforseen circumstances, and Deseronto wasnot represented.

All games are scheduled for Wednesday afternoons, and will be played then unless arrangements are made to play on Sundays. A double schedule has been drawn up, and the league gets under way on the 14th of May, which, although rather early for an opening date, is necessary if the finals are to be played and the winning team declared in time to play off with the rest of Ontario.

Home and home games will be played between the teams finishing first and second, and the winners will be awarded the Knox Cup. No decision was reached regarding umpires but night but this will be dealt with by the executive before the first game. It was also decided to adopt the constitution of the old Bay of Quinte League with just one or two changes, one of these being that an entry fee of fifteen dollars be collected from each team. The schedule is as follows.

May 14—Tweed at Trenton; Point Anne at Picton.

May 21—Picton at Tweed; Trenton at Point Anne.

May 28—Tweed at Picton; Point Anne at Trenton.

June 4—Tweed at Point Anne; Trenton at Picton.

June 11—Point Anne at Tweed ;Picton at Trenton.

June 18—Trenton at Tweed; Picton at Point Anne.

June 25—Trenton at Tweed; Point Anne at Picton.

July 2—Picton at Tweed; Trenton at Point Anne.

July 9—Tweed at Picton; Point Anne at Trenton.

July 16—Tweed at Point Anne; Trenton at Picton.

YOUNGSTERS OPERATED UNIQUE BIKE SHOP

Brantford, April 15.—The temporary haven for "lost" bicycles was discovered by local police this afternoon when they descended on 1 Elizabeth street and 25 Lawrence street, surprising some youths who had on their agency a face and finding four bicycles complete and nine in the process of reassembling and painting. The proceeds of the work on hand showed that the stolen wheels were take apart the parts scattered and the machines rebuilt, so as to make identification by the original owners impossible. In addition the thieves filed out the numbers stamped on the frames.

MOUNTIES ARREST ONE AND GET PROTECTOR

Brantford, April 15.—The old tradition, "Get your man," is being adhered to by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Members of the force appeared in court with one of the three Indians in Miracle Brothers. Richard, charged with a recent assault on Constable Graves, who was knocked out for a time during a dance party rumpus on the reserve. With him appeared also Reginald Martin, charged with harboring Richard Miracle, knowing him to be a fugitive from justice. The search for two other brothers is being continued.

'UNCLE EBEN' ON KEEPING WELL

Horses and Cows Aid Us Against Many Diseases

A horse can keep you from dying of diphtheria, and a cow may prevent you from catching smallpox!

So "Uncle Eben" tells readers of the Country Guide of Winnipeg, in an article contained in a recent issue Uncle Eben is a retired farmer, who, finding time hanging heavily on his hands, took up the study of health, and got ahold of all the free pamphlets he could.

As for the horse and the cow, the former, he points out, is the scientists' source of anti-toxin, which is given to people who have taken diphtheria while the latter provides the vaccine which protects against smallpox, and he feels that people who don't take advantage of these immunities, are fools.

"You hear a lot nowadays about the Conquest of Disease," he says, "and what Modern Science Has Done for the Human Race. But you know the conquest of disease is like an automobile—it's no good unless you ride it.

"One of your kids had diphtheria didn't she?" he accosted a neighbor. "Did you know it was your own darned fault she had it? Hold on now, just a minute! A neighbor of mine before I moved into town, had a boy die of typhoid. Do you know that kid would be alive and kickin' today if his pa had taken a little trouble before he took sick?" And then he proceeds to tell how people can be innoculated, cheaply and easily, against diphtheria and against typhoid fever, but how they don't take the trouble to "ride" the "automobile" of prevented medicine.

"There now, d'you see what I'm get ting at? The trouble is people won't have anti-diphtheria toxoid given to their kids. And what happens? Well you nearly lost a youngster from diphtheria and every year about 1200 Canadians, mostly children, die from the disease while 12,500 sicken of it. Now do you see what I mean when I say that the conquest of disease is like an automobile—no good unless you ride it? If your girl had been treated with toxoid she would never have got diphtheria. But it cost you a whole of it $5 more or less. And you think you would have cost you to take your whole family to your doctor and have him shoot toxoid in to all of 'em. And how much economic loss do you figure those 13,500 cases and 1200 deaths a year cost this country? What good does it do these people that doctors have conquered diphtheria, when they let diphtheria conquer them? Tisn't the doctor's fault. Doctor can't come up to you on the street and shoot something in your arm. You'd have him pinched if he did!"

If one person in every three was killed ahead of his time in a railway crossing accident, such a public hue and cry would go up that within a year, grade-crossings would be eliminated, regardless of expense. But our one-out-of-three toll is not so dramatic as that. It is brought about by the stealthy ravages of disease, and therefore is isn't noticed. For people have not yet learned that many of the diseases that kill their children, their husbands and wives and friends could be prevented.

An inconceivable amount of sickness and premature death could be eliminated if people could be induced to get thoroughly examined, regularly, by their physicians. There is an enormous amount of incipient diseases of many types which, being neglected in early stages, result in serious disability demanding hospital care and often resulting in death.

One of our leading public health authorities, says: "Sickness costs Canada over $311,000,000 annually. The loss of future earnings through premature death is conservatively estimated at one million dollars a year.

Diphtheria kills 1,200 Canadians every year, while 12,500 other Canadians suffer from this disease but recover.

Yet science offers you a toxoid treatment to make you and your children immune to diphtheria. This disease is a frightful child-slayer. Have you taken advantage of toxoid to protect your children, or may they be among the stricken 12,500 during the next twelve months—or possibly among the doomed 1,200?

Typhoid Fever killed 1,100 people in Canada in 1927. Yet typhoid fever is absolutely preventable by means with in the reach of everyone.

Tuberculosis—8,000 people died of tuberculosis during 1927. Yet we have cut the death rate from this scourge in half, during the past 25 years, and we can absolutely eliminate it with adequate health machinery.

Cancer—early treatment (which is assured to anyone taking the trouble to undergo an annual or semi-annual physical examination) marvelous success in curing cancer, in many cases

Venereal Diseases—The organized and successful attack that this country is making upon venereal diseases is an utterly convincing proof of the progress that can be made in disease control when all forces of the state combine in a necessary undertaking.

Alaska now has a greenhouse heated by natural hot springs right under the Arctic Circle and fresh spring vegetables will be possibilities.

Cases in Wisconsin during the jurisdiction in divorce cases granted 2714 divorces in 1928.

Maori Youth Finds aluable Ambergris

Kawhia, New Zealand, April 16—A Maori youth brought a large mass of ambergris here recently and deposited it at the local branch of the Bank of New Zealand. The find was made at the Aioea Heads, on a block of land allotted recently. The ambergris is believed to be worth about $10,000, although its exact value has not been determined. The boy refused an offer of $2500 in cash from a local trader.

The lad was returning home from work when he was attracted by a large lump of marine floatsam lying on the beach, and on closer inspection came to the conclusion that it was ambergris, although he had never previously seen a specimen of this valuable commodity.

When the substance was brought into Kawhia, it was at once identified by several who were acquainted with the characteristics of ambergris and its value was immediately recognized. The whole mass measured two feet long and of varying thickness, weighing 23 pounds.

COAST TO COAST TRAMP IS PLANNED

Montreal, April 16.—The stigma of weakness which has fallen on this generation is presently to be lifted by Aime Joyal, of Montreal, Manitoba. He is going to take a bottle of water from the Atlantic Ocean near Halifax and empty it into the Pacific at Vancouver, walking the distance between these cities, to prove that men of today can stand any hardships their forefathers could bear, and perhaps also some they never had to meet. He expects to make the trip in ten months and he will leave Halifax a month hence.

Aime Joyal is the son of Jean Bap tiste Joyal, son of a pioneer family; descendant of Mary Ann Gaboury who was the first white woman to penetrate the west beyond the Great Lakes. Aime Joyal declared. The grandfather of the ambitious hiker was Jean Baptiste Lalimondiere, a trapper on the Red River, who once walked from Regina (then Fort Douglas) to Montreal and back with papers from the settlers of the district to Lord Selkirk. His equipment was a gun, a hatchet and a blanket; and he had to avoid all the posts along the way because the papers he carried were detrimental to the interests of North Western Trading Company, then at war with the Hudson's Bay Company in the Red River Valley and they wished to prevent him from executing his errand, Joyal says.

"Cheap Golf" Nearly Causes Golf War

Sydney, N. S. W., April 16—A golf war was narrowly averted here recently when Abe Kirkwood, refused to play an exhibition match with Walter Hagen, refused to go ahead with the show if it was to be witnessed by a "cheap gallery." He complained that the price of admission was originally 10 shillings and was reduced to five shillings without consulting him.

Kirkwood demanded a guarantee of a fixed sum and declared that if Australians would not pay a good price to see the world's best golfers in action, they would call it off. The fact that the Killara Golf Club, where the two players were billed to play, is the most exclusive and expensive club in Sydney, made the former Australian golf star's outburst more amusing in the eyes of the public. The chief object in lowering the price of admission was to give the greatest possible number an opportunity of witnessing the match.

A compromise was reached at the eleventh hour, when it was decided to hold the exhibition for charity purposes. The committee, however, issued a statement declaring that neither Joe Kirkwood or any other golfer could hold a gun to their heads.

"I don't care what they charge," said Kirkwood to an interviewer. "But I must have my guarantee. I can't break faith with the people in Melbourne who financed the tour."

It is understood that Kirkwood agreed to pay Hagen $1800 for the tour.

It Costs Money to Clean Dead Whales

Vancouver, B. C., April 16—The cost of giving a dead whale a watery bath—using gasoline, soap and water—works out at $7.65.

A. C. Burdick, head of the Pacific Salvage Company, Victoria has accepted bill for $2303.01 in full settlement for the labor of cleaning thirty whales, a bill that is considered unique in shipping circles.

Last year the Pacific Salvage Company sent the salvage steamer Salvage King to Akutan, to salvage the United States freighter Golden Forest ashore near there. Every assistance was given the salvage crew by a nearby whaling station, men being loaned and fresh water supplied freely. Meantime the whalers were steadily bringing in their catch from sea and soon thirty of the big mammals lay moored side by side at the whaling station awaiting the eventual conversion into whale oil and the numerous other by-products of a whaling station.

One morning the tanks of the wrecked freighter burst, pouring a flood of oil over the surface of the sea, finding its way to the moored whales. There it collected and the station crew before any of the processing could begin commenced the hand-scrub every mighty body.

The whaling company officials thought the ships should pay the actual labor cost of this unusually unnecessary function and Mr. Burdick in view of the splendid treatment given his outfit promptly remitted the required sum. $7.65 for hand-scrubbing crude oil off an acre or less of a whale skin was not, in his opinion, an excessive charge.

Young Teens in SPRING FASHION

By GRETCHEN THOMSON

"Girls will be girls"—after several seasons of sporting boys. More than that—they will be ladies—for even the young daughters of today are going to be sophisticated this spring—more so than ever before. Tiny girls from size six to fourteen want in dress exactly like their mothers the the older grown ups; so their little frocks are being designed with higher waistlines, with slightly flared skirts (all with even hemlines, of course)—indeed, with tendencies toward the molded silhouette.

One of the outstanding fashions for little girls seems to be the jacket dress —adorably chic with abbreviated jacket and pleated skirt often no more than six inches long—a blouse of white with frilled collar.

A large number of prints will be worn; prints that are youthful, yet exemplifying that bit of sophistication that the younger generation dares with much success to acquire. Plain colors also promise to be important, including new shades in blue, green, beige, red, and yellow.

Long and short sleeves both are going to be good, but in the majority of cases the younger girl will go sleeveless in the modern fashion. Sometimes attractive little cap sleeves will be seen, or little capes that come down just over the shoulder.

There are dresses in voile printed dimity (both small and large figures), batiste, handkerchief linen in plain and printed designs, and striped and figured silk—and all are smart for the tiny tots.

Coats for tots endorse solid colors in bright tones, of which the red range is outstanding. This includes the brick shades, and rosy peach. Rough-surfaced tweeds, sometimes in nubbed effects, are favored. Many of these coats are trimmed with touches of handwork. A recurrent treatment is bands of plaitucking, arranged in italics slant, and set around the neckline and down the front.Not lining the pockets or bordering the sleeves. Other models endorse delicate cut out motifs of contrasting colors.

Coats for older girls use colorful tweeds frequently in two-color combinations, while some models are trimmed with encrusted motifs in one of the ground colors. There is an interesting group of imported wool-fabrics featuring tweed and basket weaves which advocate colorful modernistic motifs in jacquered treatments. Scarf collars are used on some of the models.

Hats for both tots and older girls match the coat in color or fabric, or in both. The straw hats are either entirely of the coat fabric, or trimmed with it. Lacy straws are emphasized, in poke styles, and in models with small brims folded back off the face. Hats for girls also reveal the face, in the manner of the models for women, but more simply styled.

Chinese Construct Ice-Free Harbour

Peiping, China, April 16—A variety of financial complications are foreseen as a result of a contract signed by the Chinese governments at Nanking and Mukden for construction of an ice-free harbor at Hulutao, on the extreme southern coast of Manchuria, at a cost of $6,400,000 gold. The contract has been let to the Netherlands Harbor Works Company.

Completion of this harbor within the specified period of five years would give the Chinese their only real harbor in the north, which is not dominated by foreign interests, as Manchuria a number of countries have concessions, and Dairen is owned by the Japanese, the territory held under lease.

Possible protests are likely to come from Japan and Great Britain, it is believed, for diplomatic reasons. The Japanese have treaties that the Chinese shall not build railways which will imperil the Japanese South Manchurian Railway. The Chinese government however, repudiates the treaties on the ground that they were negotiated with governments now defunct.

The British protest, it is expected, will be on entirely different grounds. The Dutch loan providing the money for harbor construction is secured upon the surplus earnings of the Peiping-Mukden Railway. Several loans to this railway by British interests have been in arrears for years, and the issuance of a new loan while old loans remain unpaid would be morally indefensible, the British contend.

The Chinese are particularly anxious to have a port of their own in Manchuria in order to compete with the Japanese.

Cash Prizes Add Interest to The Dairy Industry

Several donations have been received here for the Dairy Herd Competition which is to be held under the auspices of the Central Ontario Cheesemakers' Association starting May 1st next and closing on October 31st. Prominent among these are two substantial contributions, the one from the Smith Hardware and the other from Lovell & Christmas, large cheese exporting firm of Montreal, of which W. H. Marton, of this city, is local representative.

The Central Ontario Cheesemakers are sponsoring the competition with the view of increasing the butterfat production per acre among the cheese factory patrons in their jurisdiction and also with the idea of encouraging them to produce more and better milk by providing them with a double incentive to do so. There will be three sweepstake prizes, the 1st of $50.00, which has been donated by the magazine "The Farmer's Advocate", second prize of $40.00 and third of $30.00.

First, second and third prizes will be awarded to the three farmers in each dairy instructor's group in Central Ontario who between the 1st day of May, and the 31st of October deliver or cause to be delivered to their respective cheese factories, the greatest average number of pounds of butterfat per acre of land farmed by them in their group and who have adhered to and complied with the condition and regulations governing the contest.

A dairy farmer will have to farm at least fifty acres of land and his chief source of revenue be dairy farming.

PROGRAM AT R.C.I.

In connection with the Belleville Collegiate Institute annual oratorical contest which will be held in the auditorium tonight, an attractive program has been arranged. A novel attraction will be cartooning by Mr. A. Cleveland, and Mr. Tilley will be heard in favourite baritone selections. The Girls Chorus, under the direction of Mr. Rena Hunter, will give several numbers and the 5th Form will complete the program by a stunt. The winners in the oratorical contest will later compete with other winners in this district, for the district championship.

Attacked by Asthma. The first fearful sensation is of suffocation, which hour by hour becomes more desperate and hopeless. To such a case the relief afforded by Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy seems nothing less than miraculous. Its help is quickly apparent and soon the dreadful attack is mastered. The asthmatic who has found out the dependability of this stirring remedy will never be without it. It is sold everywhere.

RADIO FANS CORNER

Let's not talk about N. zh? As Andy says, "Tee requited," and I believe me that's no fooling either. The patient was so weak it almost passed out on our hands tonight.

Bunch of great programs on the air too, wasn't there? Did you hear Baby Rose Marie last night over the RKO hour and Gus Edwards? Good stuff.

Welcome Lewis conralto crooner (tell known to radio audiences for her past performances through the NBC) will sing during the program of Rayh. nie Ripples tonight, at 7.30 over WJZ.

The Yeast Foamers tonight with Retting and Flatt playing "Missouri Waltz" and "Limin Yvelle" which will be sung by Chasmey Parsons, tenor. The program begins at 9 o'clock and is heard over WJZ.

At 8.30, WJZ the Sylvania Foresters present a program of Southern music and their male quartet and orchestra will be present to carry it along.

Don't forget R. A. Rolfe and his Lucky Strike Orchestra tonight at 7.30 over WJZ, a half hour of peppy, lively music that we'll all enjoy.

Rather hard work digging out programs for tonight. Guess we'll just have to take pot luck and tune in on a station and hope for the best.

Radio Used to Destroy Germs

High Frequency Current Is Subject of Startling Experiments

PITTSBURG, Pa. April 16—Science has found a new battleiron on which to take the offensive in its fight against disease, with a few pioneers drafting the magic of radio in hopes it may some day lengthen human life.

It became known today that high-frequency electric current on an extremely short wavelength has been used successfully to kill disease germs in animals, and scientists hope in time to perfect their experiments to such an extent that the radio can be used to kill disease in human beings. The chief experiments are being made at the General Electric Company laboratories at Schenectady, N.Y., but similar tests are being conducted in the biological laboratories at the University of Pittsburg and at West Pennsylvania Hospital here.

Waves Heat Body

The experiments are linked up with the newly acquired knowledge of scientists that high frequencies of from 5 00 to 10,000 kilocycles on a 1,250-metre wavelength cause the human body and tissues to become heated as though a fever existed. It is the goal of scientists to develop these experiments to the extent where they will not only kill disease germs, but will replace malarial fever germs in the treatment of paralysis.

VETERAN OF PRESS DIES IN HIS 92ND YEAR

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., April 16 —John E. B. McCready, last of the pre-Confederation journalists, died here late last night.

On April 4, he celebrated his ninety second birthday. He had continued writing until six weeks before that time, when a cold forced him to bed.

Mr. McCready was in the Press Gallery at the first Confederation Parliament. At one time he was Parliamentary correspondent for the Toronto Globe.

Mr. McCready in early life was an adept at swimming, skating and running, while as a driver he always kept a good horse. In later years he favored billiards, walking and checkers. Outside his usual journalistic duties he was fond of lecturing and debating, and was entertained many thousands of people in this way. He was always optimistic, buoyant and full of the joy of life. At the age of 60 he learned to ride a bicycle, and kept up cycling regularly every summer until he was well past 70. When motor cars came into vogue in the Province of his adoption, he was the first to advocate their use, and although he never learned to drive he was keenly devoted to automobiling. He covered many thousands of miles by this mode of travel.

Centenary

The ladies of Centenary held a very successful and helpful meeting at the home of Mrs. Edwin Adams on Thursday last. There were a goodly number present and all did justice to the dinner provided by the hostess and the ladies of the Upper Second and Upper Third. "Take the Name of Jesus With You," was the hymn which the Pres. of the Women's Association chose to open her meeting and this was followed by prayer by Mrs. Milton Vandrewater. The secretary, Mrs. J. Kelley read the minutes, after which a number of items of business were disposed of. The Sec. was asked to write a letter of sympathy to Mrs. P. White, who has lately lost her mother and each member was asked to send an Easter card to Miss Hodgson, who has been seriously ill in the Western Hospital. A piece of poetry was written by Mr. Clayton to Rev. J. R. Butler was then read. Following is the poem:

JOHN R. AND THE LADIES AID

John R. has a pulpit at Centenary Church
And from it he preaches each Sabbath with zest;
Those soul stirring messages sure come from his heart,
To cheer up the Christian and the sinners arrest.

Combined with his efforts to bring in the strayed
He has the service of the dear Ladies Aid,
They meet each month, and each and all feel
That it is their duty to stay at the wheel.

If there is any one sick, at once they reflect
This brother or sister no comfort shall lack;
We'll get a nice pretty posy to brighten the room,
And help them to see the light shine through the gloom.

They send the sick posies to let them all feel
They have their kind thoughts when they are down at the heel.
And on every soft petal of that flower is displayed,
John R. in his pulpit and the dear Ladies Aid.

Immediately following came the W. M. S. meeting and it was opened by singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and the 23rd Psalm repeated in unison, and then the singing of one verse of "Throw Out The Life Line." Mrs. Robt. Hart offered up an appalling prayer and Mrs. Jas. Redford read the minutes of the last meeting. A number of items of business were discussed. A committee was appointed to decorate the church for Easter Sunday and also each Sunday in May. Mrs. Jas. Redford was appointed to attend the next Mission Band meeting. Mrs. Robt. Hart and Miss Annabel Adams delighted the ladies with a fine duet after which Mrs. Jas. Ray read the Devotional Leaflet. A most interesting and instructive paper on "Help" was given by Mrs. D. A. Thrasher, then each member responded to the roll call with a verse of Scripture and one verse of "Face to Face" was sung and the Mizpah benediction closed the meeting.

A social half hour was much enjoyed by the ladies following these meetings and Mrs. Robt. Hart kindly offered her home for the May meeting.

GROVES SUBDUES SLUGGING YANKS

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 16.—Picking up the winning habits where they left off last October, Connie Mack's sprightly young band of Athletics started their 1930 American League campaign impressively yesterday and to the complete satisfaction of 23,000 fans by trouncing Yankees, 6 to 3.

Al Simmons celebrated the last minute signing of his contract by pleasing a home run on his first turn at bat, scoring "Mule" Haas ahead of him. Robert Moses Grove southpawed the Metropolitan clan into an almost complete state of subjection.

Koenig walked with one out in the third, and Ruth then belted one that was labelled home run all the way. It was headed out of the park, sailing a good six feet over the wall, when the ball suddenly bounced off one of the speaking cones and back into the field.

Ruth was held to a double, this hit sending Koenig to third base in the second inning. Gehrig then rolled one down the first base line to Foxx, whom throw to the plate was poor, and was fumbled by Grove, both Koenig and Ruth scoring.

WYATT SAVES GAME

Whitlow Wyatt, recruit righthander, starred in the role of relief pitcher as the Detroit Tigers defeated the St. Louis Browns 4 to 3 in the season's opening game at Navin Field yesterday. There was a crowd of 17,000.

After the Browns had found George Uhle, Detroit starting pitcher, for 12 hits, including three home runs, Wyatt turned the visitors back hitless for three innings.

Sam Gray started for St. Louis, and was followed by Hailsoaner and Kimsey. The Browns failed in the pinches, leaving 13 runners on base.

Brown's Batting Won

Big 8,500 fans saw the Washington Senators defeat the Red Sox 6 to 1, in Boston's big league opening game here yesterday. It was cold and windy and such weather, coming after the hottest day of the present year, kept the attendance down.

Lloyd Brown, southpaw, held the Sox to three hits. Two of them came in the sixth, when Ruffing doubled and Miller singled to give Boston its lone tally.

CHAMPION CUBS WIN FIRST GAME

National League Champions Defeat Cardinals, 9-8, in Slugging Match

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 16.—The slugging Chicago Cubs, champions of the National League, pounded five St. Louis Cardinal pitchers for 15 hits and won the opening game of the season here yesterday by 9 to 8, despite a ninth-inning Cardinal rally which threatened to turn the tide. Official attendance was 14,000.

The Cub attack included six doubles and a triple. Flint Rhem, who started on the mound for the locals, was knocked out in the third inning after he had allowed five doubles and three singles.

Giants Win Close One

The New York Giants opened the National League season here yesterday by taking a close but poorly played game from the Boston Braves, 3 to 2.

Bill Walker, giant lefthander, continued his winning streak of 1929 by pitching a fine game. An error was partly responsible for the two Boston runs and deprived him of his chance for a shutout. Harry Seibold of Boston was a bit weaker and received even worse support.

Sweetland Blanks Robins

Lester Sweetland, Philadelphia south paw ace, took complete charge of the opening game here yesterday and shut out the Robins, 1 to 0. Sweetland held the Brooklyns to three hits, scattered through the first three innings, and his double in the eighth opened the rally which gave the Phillies their one run.

The largest opening day crowd on record for Ebbets Field, estimated at 27,000 saw Sweetland and William Watson Clark his left-handed rival, engage in a spectacular pitching duel.

Reds Hit Well But Lose

Heavy hitting and a ball which changed hands four times featured yesterday's opening game which Pittsburg won from the Reds, 7 to 6. Thirty two hits were made for a total of 43 bases.

Bartel and Hemsley hit consecutive home runs at the start of the second inning. Paul Waner led the Pirates at bat with four hits in as many times at bat.

Both starting pitchers, Lucas and Kremer, were knocked from the box. The attendance was 30,112.

Virtually, there are only four countries not under white control. They are China, Japan, Abyssinia and Turkey.

The Prince of Wales will, in June, attend the Ipswich pageant commemorating the 600th anniversary of the death of Cardinal Wolsey.

India is spending $20,000,000 in railway electrification.

"Y" Alleys

There was plenty of fireworks in the Ladies' Junior Afternoon League yesterday when a sensational game between Smile and Try Club took three points to Hustlers one, to win the championship of the league. The S. and T. were way to a great start, when they took the first point by 304, but after that, the Hustlers settled down and bowled well and although they lost the second by 15 pins they took the third by four and but the Smiling crowd had too much lead from the first string so made it three out of four. High bowlers were Miss Kerr for the S. and T. and Mrs. Shorey for Hustlers. The special feature day was a nice single of 251 by Miss Kerr who is a new bowler this season.

In the Junior League the Winnie Winkie-Night Hawk game last night was another of pinch hitting and a score to roll. Scores are held waiting completion.

Day's practice game prize winners—G. Blake, H. Phillips.

The Senior Ball Tournament arranged for Thursday night already has the following entries. Mr. Graham, H. Manahon, F. Burke, H. Horrigan, B. Horrigan, H. W. Leavitt, S. Westlake A. Kennedy, L. Mack, C. Kerman, E. Rushworth, E. Davey, E. Currie, J. Graham, E. Blake. This tournament will start at 8.15 p.m.

In the second Junior League game the two Sub-Springs from the Bowmen and the Black Diamonds had a battle royal and the points were divided two each. Big nine singles were Wilson 240, 183, Sleed 188, Currie 187, 199; Wrightsman 207, Pawley 183, 187; Graham 186; Smith 220. Forty-two pins was the difference on the total.

RESUME WORK ON GOSPEL TEMPLE

Home two years ago a cement foundation was laid for a new Gospel Alliance Temple, to be erected on the south side of West Moira street, adjacent to the rubin of the former grist mill. The completion of the building was delayed owing to the fact that a river crest could not be noted and this obstacle has been removed and workmen are now engaged in the building of the structure. Mr. Perry Denike has charge of the construction work. It will be remembered that the Alliance had a place of worship on the West side of Front Street but it was secured by Mr. George Deline for the enlargement of the Quinte Vulcanizing Company. Work on the new temple will be prosecuted with vigor.

Bequeathing $10,000 and his house and furniture etc his housekeeper, the Rev. D. E. Davys, of Orpington, who died on October 25, left £28,465.

Mr. Archibald Kay, of Glenlivet, and Mr. David Poggie, of Edinburgh, both farmers, were elected Royal Scottish Academicians.

FIRPO BROWN STOPS CUTLER

Ontario 105-Pound Champion Loses to Gwynne at St. Agnes Show

Toronto, April 15—The St. Agnes Club held one of their popular boxing cards at Firpo Hall last night. Eleven bouts were held, ranging from the 60-pound class to the heavyweight division. A fairly large number of spectators were present and they all went away entirely satisfied with the showing of the boys.

The biggest surprise of the evening was the bout between Chrles, of the Classic Club and Gwynne from the Premier A. C. Chrles recently won the 15-pound class at London and was favored to defeat Gwynne. However the bout was fought at catch-weights and Gwynne had much the better of it, being considerably taller and much heavier than Chrles. Chrles tried very hard at all times and showed some very clever defensive work, but was not able to get a margin in any one of the three rounds.

"Firpo" Brown came his appearance in the role of a substitute when Skimming, the heavyweight champion of Ontario, was unable to appear, being under the doctor's care. The fans were greatly disappointed when it was announced that Skimming was unable to box, but they soon got over it, when "Firpo" climbed into the ring to face Cutler from the St. Agnes Club. Both boys started off at a fast pace, and the first round ended about even. In the second round, "Firpo" had all the advantage, and it soon became apparent that it was only a matter of time. However, Cutler proved to be game to the core, and took a terrific beating before the bout was stopped. He took a count of nine in the first and the second round, and continued on with the bout. It is said that Cutler may have had him down again. This time he only managed to get to his feet by sheer grit, and referee Lou Marsh stopped the bout, declaring "Firpo" the winner on a technical knockout.

Tests at Crouch End School, London, N., showed that over 10 per cent of the boys and 11.3 per cent of the girls suffered from deafness.

ENGAGEMENT MOOTED WHEN KING OF SPAIN GIVES DUKE DUCKING

SEVILLE, Spain, April 16.—A practical joke played yesterday by King Alfonso upon the Duke of Sipsetto may mean a royal engagement is in prospect between the royal families of Spain and Italy.

In the presence of the Infanta Beatrix, his eldest daughter, and other members of the royal family, the king's palace gardens of Alcazar, lured the duke to a trick bench in the The duke sat on the bench, which immediately released a spring controlling a concealed fountain and was drenched with water.

King Alfonso, the infants and the duke's retinue, the Duchess of Aosta, all joined in the merriment.

Canadians Control National Enterprises

CANADIANS ARE IN CONTROL OF NATION'S WEALTH

British and Foreign Capital Invested Now Amounts to $5,904,169,000

U.S. LEADS IN TOTAL

Dominion Money Sent Abroad Almost One and Three-quarter Billions

OTTAWA, April 16.—Canadians own from 85 to 65 per cent. of the securities of all enterprises located on Canadian soil.

Canada's national wealth is between $28,000,000,000 and $30,000,000,000 of which one-fifth is capital from other countries.

United States investments in Canada are greater than British investments in the Dominion, and Canada has more than ten times as much money invested in the United States than she has in Britain.

Canadian indebtedness to the United States increased in 1928 by $166,000,000, while the Dominion's indebtedness to Great Britain decreased in that year by $17,000,000.

Canada's investments abroad at January 1, 1929, amounted to $1,745,231,977.

The above and many other interesting and important details of Canada's financial situation were disclosed in an estimate made public by the Dominion bureau of statistics.

The report states: "Any estimate of this character is liable to a margin of error, but the utmost care has been taken in the present computation, and it is believed that the figures represent a safe fairly to actual conditions. More complete information of this kind is being obtained from year to year, which enables corrections to be made in previous estimates. For the present estimate fairly to actual conditions. More government and railway securities were made possible through the co-operation of municipal and provincial treasury departments, railway companies and the Canadian chartered banks.

"It is estimated that the total British and foreign investment of capital in Canada on Jan. 1, 1929, was $5,904,169,000. Of this sum $2,197,682,000 was British, $3,470,087,000 was from the United States and, $236,400,000 was from other countries. Since our national wealth can be estimated for the same date as between $28,000,000,000 and $30,000,000,000, it will be seen that outside capital comprises about one-fifth of this total. Moreover, it is estimated that Canadians own from 55 per cent to 65 per cent. of the securities of all enterprises located on Canadian soil and in addition have invested abroad the sum of $1,745,231,977, which is nearly 30 per cent. of the outside investment in Canada. Of these Canadian investments abroad, $95,018,848 is estimated to be in Britain, $991,851,727 in the United States and $658,347,401 in other countries.

"Total indebtedness to outside countries increased by approximately $150,000,000 in 1928. Our indebtedness to the United States increased by $166,000,000, while that to Great Britain was reduced by $17,000,000. New Canadian issues in which outside countries participated, including stock rights amounted to about $720,000,000. Of this sum Canadians themselves took $414,000,000, United States $241,000,000 Great Britain $62,000,000 and other countries $3,000,000. In addition Canadian countries purchased old Canadian securities on the stock exchanges or made direct investments in Canada amounting to $100,000,000, of which the United States took $81,000,000, Great Britain $17,000,000 and other countries $3,000,000.

TRAPPING IS HUNTING, SAYS COURT

(Canadian Press)

Lindsay, Ont., April 16 —Lloyd Nichols of Bobcaygeon, was convicted of trapping on another trapper's lands and was fined $25.00 and was allowed on suspended sentence. Defense counsel contended that according to evidence the word "hunting" was specified but there was no mention of "trapping." The magistrate and crown however, agreed that Hunting included trapping.

ROSS HUNTER IS SKETCH SUBJECT

Prominent Local Musician Is Eulogized by The "Canadian Musician"

Following is an extract from the "Canadian Musician" of this month, in which Mr. Ross Hunter, one of Belleville's leading musicians, is honoured.

"Musical Canada takes pleasure in presenting this month Mr. Ross Hunter of Belleville, Ont., another of those enthusiastic Canadian musicians who are helping to make their communities musical. Mr. Hunter is organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas Anglican Church, supervisor of music in Belleville Collegiate, Bandmaster of the Boys' band, conductor the Y's Men's Festival Chorus, besides being first bass of the "Radio Four" male quartette and violinist of the "Quinte Trio." Besides these activities he finds time to teach violin and voice. His musical education was received from such well-known teachers as Wm. H. Hyde, of Buffalo, and John O. Stephenson, vocal teacher of New York. While in the U. S. he was conductor of the Plymouth Orchestral Society, and organist and choirmaster of Plymouth Episcopal Church, Buffalo, N. Y.

"He has also been bandmaster of Hastings and Pr. Edward County Regimental Band, and the Marmora Citizens' Band. Several string trios and quartettes and violin pieces composed by Mr. Hunter are to be found in the Theo. Presser Co., catalogue.

"This month we present as a music supplement "A Little Snow Flurry," a pianoforte composition by this Canadian composer.

"Citizens of Belleville are to be congratulated on having a musician of Mr. Hunter's calibre in charge of their high school music."

BRITISH BANKS ORGANIZED TO HELP INDUSTRY

Thomas Announces Scheme to Aid in Reorganization Basic Lines

CAPITAL SUBSCRIBED

Funds Available for Promoting Mergers in Interests of Efficiency

London, April 16—Hon. J. H. Thomas outlined in Parliament to-day the latest scheme for bolstering up Britain's export trade. It is the formation of the Bankers' Industrial Development Company, an organization which has the strongest of financial backing, and which will aid in the reorganization and rationalization of the basic industries of Great Britain.

Mr. Thomas declared the organization had been registered at Somerset House with a nominal capital of 6,000,000 pounds (about $30,000,000). This was in 45 "A" shares and 15 "B" shares each of value of 100,000 — $500,000. The Company has the support of a very considerable proportion of most of the influential banking and financial institutions of the country by whom the shares have been subscribed. Mr. Thomas explained. The Securities Management Trust, Limited, has subscribed the "B" shares.

The company is to receive and consider schemes submitted by basic industries for the purpose of rationalization, either by industries or by regions. In other words, the capital will be made available for combining various groups of businesses in the interests of general efficiency and elimination of waste. But no public money will be involved, Mr. Thomas made plain.

SPRING FASHIONS

·what to wear· and ·where and when and how!

By GERTRUDE THOMSON

This season the choice of the wardrobe is the test of a woman's taste. Never have there been so many opportunities to find the perfect costume to bring out individual charms—and never have there been so many opportunities for going hopelessly astray—for not only has Fashion as a whole made a radical change, but each part of the gown now has its style requirement, ranging from tweeds to the sheerest fabrics. The woman, who wears her morning costume to afternoon tea, as she has correctly worn it in recent seasons, will find herself as conspicuous as the one who walks the street on a rainy day with trailing wisps of chiffon at her ankles. The 1930 woman is well dressed if, all times of the day or evening, from the morning when she murders forth by business or on a shopping tour; luncheon at home, the afternoon hours of matinee, club or tea; dinner, theatre or dancing in the evening—for each affair there is a particular ensemble which has been designed expressly for the purpose. To be inappropriately gowned not only handicaps her chances of success, but marks her as a member of that class of women who are not style-conscious. To avoid pitfalls requires a real study of spring fashions, and we are giving them an outline that will be a guide in choosing the various items of a tasteful, fashion-correct wardrobe, with important highlights on what will be worn—when it will be worn and how it will be worn.

Correct Morning Costume

More morning wear, clever frocks of knitted fabrics or tweeds in fascinating patterns and color combinations would be an inducement for even the most indolent person to get up early and go some place. Tweed frocks made with the new swagger blazes and fitted flares, and sweater ensembles suggestive of the Southland, also are smart for the early morning wayfarer. Among the newest wrinkles in the realm of morning apparel is the silk frock with lumber jacket of the same kind of material in contrasting color.

The Tailored Fashion

It is easy to see that the suit will be the most important fashion of spring. While the ensemble of coat and dress is smart—the newer idea of the tailored jacket and skirt is the favorite, and if you haven't a suit this spring your wardrobe will be at a total loss. A new suit material which promises to be very popular this year has silk woven on with the woolen threads and is usually a dark color though also in lighter tone. Soft, flannel-like woolen suits, and those of rubber tweeds, with or without fur trimming, also are in the fashion parade, and many different versions are offered. The tuck-in blouse and poked shirt are so smart looking and youthful that they refuse to be discarded. The newest skirts, however, have longer pleats and a more doubled flare. Heather mixtures for the tweeds, and black, blue or some dark brown for the plain wear are the correct choice. Pitted waistlines, cape treatments, wide and up-in-front collar points upon which practically all jackets agreed and, as in every good fashion, there are types of suits for every occasion—the short tailored jacket for morning—the three-quarter jacket suit for general wear and the fur-trimmed suit for formal daytime wear.

Spring Coats

Decorative effects achieved through amazing agreeing to be the dominant note of spring coat fashions. Detailed treatments are stressed. Unique arrange the hem flare—to create back interest—these and numerous variations indicate the importance of the trimming of decorative and novel suggestions of the flaring contour are noted in Gordon's as well as full circular skirts and circular cut flounces placed low to accent the flaring hemline. On the opposite side of the picture straight lines are fashion's—draped pouch cowl, standing collars and insets of fur, deep shawl lines and tuxedos, also effects and hems using galyak, lamb's-wool, lapin, dyed squirrel or broadtail.

Prints Much in Vogue

Last year's prints won't do for the leader of prints is reversed this year and those with large, brilliant designs are now chosen for chiffon evening and formal frocks and small, neat flower designs of crepe for afternoon and informal wear. Quaint charm is being are the afternoon printed frocks with the ripped sleeves, peplums, circular skirts edged with ruffles and bows. Plain colored crepe frocks in the most fascinating colors imaginable and in the touch is the spring fashion. The new tones are soft and subdued in lovely rose, blue, green, purple or brown, and self-trimmed or adorned with a bit of lace at the neck and sleeves. While daytime frocks are longer and adhere closely to the lines of the new silhouette, they are usually of even length.

For After Five o'Clock

Dinner dresses are the season's collection. Chiffon in black or pastel shades (and there is a very wide range of these) are starting a dramatic return to fashion), with the new deep V-neck and plastic little ruffed sleeves and skirts of ankle length, touching the floor in some places as these frocks boast of the uneven hemline. Capes are also in favor as part of the informal and formal evening costume. Chanel started the idea as a summer sports wrap and now all the other famous designers and some who are not so famous are using the idea—entire capes which encircle the body, cape-collared capes and cape effects. Printed chiffons, the hem and the cape decorated with a wide tulle border are colorful and chic for dinner and informal evening affairs. Many of these capes are detachable and thus can be made into a formal evening frock quickly.

The Silhouette

As always, simplicity is the test of the true chicness and the test of the new fashions manage to achieve an effect of subtle simplicity. Simple detail will create detail's and picturesque lines. The silhouette of spring is the silhouette of good taste—a modification of extreme length and straight-line-ness. As to length there are four classifications—for sport, three inches below the knee—for daytime, four to six—for afternoon, six inches below the knee, except for the formal costume. Ankle length all around, with perhaps a dip in the back is accepted for evening.

The normal waistline is defined by a belt, shirring or tucking. Skirtfulness remains low, gored effects and pleats are prominent, but there is less flare in thes marterst models.

Sleeves

Many things unexpected of sleeves have come to pass, and distinct consideration is attention by their greater elaboration, their shorter than full length or their complete absence. Many of the sports dresses have little cap sleeves and also much attention to those that are sleeveless. Dresses for afternoon tea have three-quarter or above-the-elbow sleeves.

Capes and Collars

Fashioning this season seem to have been designed with the special idea of adding capes or wide berthas which are of the sort to make even a debutante look younger. More than half of the dresses have a capelet in some form—attached to sleeves—a wide cape bertha or a shoulder cape that is detachable. The cape or capelet of course attains its smartest expression on coat or suit. On the daytime or sports model it is seldom more than shoulder-length, while for afternoon it may reach to elbow and be elaborated with band of fur.

Bolero

The bolero influence is seen in many directions — from suits and coats to afternoon, daytime and evening gowns—sometimes a separate jacket—often simulated by tucks, bands or ruffles.

New Color Tones

As fashionable colors are naturally restricted to compliment fashionable complexions the sartorial color chart of 1930 will favor the pearly feminine tones although accompanies feminine flash on epochs and is coming into fash on epochs and is coming into fash on epochs and is coming into f

HOW AGED NEGRO LEARNED ROLE

Stepped Into Lead of Famous Play Without Previous Experience

Trying to be God-like was the most difficult part of the difficult role that Richard B. Harrison, former London, Ont., negro, had to learn when he stepped into the lead of "Green Pastures" without previous stage experience, a part that has won for him extravagant praise from the critics and theatre-goers of New York. Harrison takes the role of The Lord in the play staged by Marc Connelly, depicting the spiritual life of the negroes in slavery days. Both the play and its leading man have attracted great attention.

When Harrison was turned over to Danton Walker, director, it seemed there was no hope in him. He had the face, the carriage and the age to make him suitable, but he acted as one might expect anyone to act whose past experience had been limited to the recitation of Shakespearean soliloquies and the poems of Paul Dunbar. The success of "The Green Pastures" depended on Harrison and Connelly could not make an actor of him.

Strange as it may seem, one of the things against this performer was his inability to recite his lines in the manner of the negro. His early training was far away from the Southland and he had none of the southern negro's vocal idiosyncrasies. The defect had to be rectified. But that was not all. The man was entirely lacking in a proper conception of the importance of his part. He was to appear as the slave negroes conceived God to be, but he could not, mention the Deity without lifting his eyes in the gesture of reverence that had been taught him at his mother's knee. Likewise the fact that he was "de Lawd," his reaction to any reference to the Omnipotent was always that of a worshipper.

Teaching him the errors of the southern dialect was easy because Harrison had heard them all and only needed to be reminded of them. Teaching him to act as a god was something else.

In the first place, Harrison was fighting a terrific inferiority complex. This was his first show; for others in the company it was a continuation of a professional life. They had been in "Porgy," "Harlem" and colored motion pictures. Tyree was dirt beneath their feet, but Harrison was a super-high-hat a fellow worker more effectively than the rest of the cast ever did. Harrison, his nature being what it is —he is a bit too much of a "yes man" according to those who know him well —he could not stand up under the subtle criticism the more experienced members of the cast directed against him.

Was Too Kindly and Reverent

Walker's first job was to give him self-confidence. When this was done the dialect was tackled. Mr. Walker tells his experience this way:

"After Harrison began to gain confidence in himself and to learn the dialect I still had a great deal of difficulty because his own personal conception of God kept getting in the way of the acting. As the whole secret of the play is the transition from a God of wrath and vengeance to a God of mercy. Mr. Harrison was too kindly and too actually reverent toward an unseen power. I suddenly had all the trouble and the solution of this one day by telling him to remember that, after all, he was supposed to be the Supreme Being and that there was therefore nobody above him to be reverent to. Then, to get him to be a God of wrath and vengeance, I told him to play it like a big business man —to handle the wiping out of mankind by the flood as impartially and coldly as any Wall street financier would conduct a merger."

There came a day when Harrison seemed to have a proper conception of his own importance as "de Lawd," but he could not quite put himself into the part, his sixty-five years of reverence holding him back in a bit of shaky fright.

God-like he was in manner and bearing by this time. He did not look to the heavens when he mentioned his biblical name. But his voice was not right.

Imagine Himself an Angry Senator

"Boost it up like a senator," Walker told him one day.

The great voice of the negro filled the room. He was now the senator with the little world, worried at the things that were happening there. He had threatened and as a result the negro delight threaten a spoiled child. Suddenly he thundered on his denunciations.

There had to come a point where he went back to his first conception of God. He changed into the God of mercy by ceasing to regard himself as an infuriated legislative critic.

Walker, who trained Harrison so effectively is a southerner. His grandmother lived in Augusta, Ga., with her coterie of slaves, a lady who often boasted that her personal maid was an African princess. A lady, it might be added, whose husband was dignitary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Connelly, in writing the play — Green Pastures" did not write a line One night, when the theme of the book was running through his head he called for Walker and asked him if he would play stenographer. Then he started walking about the room, booming out the lines of "de Lawd," Moses, Adam and the rest.

Walker was not the only one the playwright Connelly called for the tedious work. One night he had the temerity to ask a prominent Broadway actress if she would come and sit at the typewriter while he spouted the lines from "Of Man Adam and Son Chillun," and the strange part was that she did.

Plea in Behalf of Blind Organists

LONDON, April 15.—(By the Canadian Press).—Dr. Walford Davies, making an appeal to those who have an appointment of organist and choirs on behalf of candidates who have the misfortune to be blind.

"These candidates," says Dr. Davies "have usually been trained in important schools for the blind. Most of them are fellows of the Royal College of Organists; many also hold diplomas as pianists, vocalists, etc., granted by the greater academies of Music.

"It is most disheartening to those capable men to be passed over so frequently without even being interviewed by the church authorities, or allowed to compete. An explanation, if offered, of this non-recognition usually takes the form of an expression of doubt as to the ability of the candidate. Such complaints, however, are seldom made by those who have actually engaged the services of a blind organist-choir-master."

New Brunswick Lady Tells Of Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. K. C. Belyea Suffered With a Very Lame Back

Brown's Flats, N. B. April 14 (Special) —"I did think my back would break and Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing for the pains of that trouble what they have done," Fred C. Belyea, a well known resident of this district, has written. "I used Dodd's Kidney Pills for my back when it was so lame I could hardly get around and I can't say too much for them. Some Dodd's Kidney Pills and after the first few doses I noticed a difference. I kept on taking them and when I had used two boxes I was a different man once again."

Thousands of Backache tell of pains relieved and health restored through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They act directly on the kidneys. They strengthen the kidneys and put them in shape to strain the uric acid out of the blood. They do one thing only, but they do that one thing well.

Westminster Abbey Becoming Crowded

LONDON, April 15.—(By Thos. T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent)—Dr. Foxley Norris, Dean of Westminster, has made the proposal that if a certain great memorial tomb in the abbey were removed it would make room for at least 100 more worshippers. And, judged by the attendance at the Abbey, not at special services, but on ordinary week-day occasions, this additional space for worshippers is badly needed.

Whether the Dean of Westminster will be enabled to proceed with the removal without encountering a variety of opposition is highly doubtful. All proposals of this kind become vocally indignant whenever a proposal is made to affect alterations in a building such as Westminster Abbey.

There is not the least doubt, though, that while the Abbey contains much that is of the highest value, it should forever be regarded as sacred and unalterable in the condition in one of the variest rubbish, in the way of monuments to persons who are entirely forgotten and whose merits never made them worthy of such perpetuation.

From the aesthetic point there is little doubt that the Abbey would look all the better if at least half the great piles of memorial stone were cleared away. Anybody who enters through the north door may be impressed with the fact that he is passing through "Statesman's Corner," but he is to be forgiven if he is inclined to liken it to a monumental mason's stoneyard.

LORDS PUT BACK PENALTY OF DEATH

London, April 16 (C.P.).—The House of Lords by vote of 45 to 13 reversed the House of Commons decision and put a clause providing the death penalty for covardice and desertion in the army, back in the Army Bill, after the Labor amendment in the Commons had removed the penalty. The bill goes back to the Commons, which will meet Thursday to consider it.

CANADA'S AIR MAIL SERVICE

Growth of Branch of Post Office Department; New Routes Opened

(Canadian Press)

Ottawa, April 15.—Canada, with her vast area and widely scattered population, is advantageously situated to derive the greatest benefits from the development of internal air mail service. The great distances, which separate the principal urban centres and the steady and broadfronted advance in settlement and development serve to render postal communication by air peculiarly valuable in the Dominion. In addition the post office department of Canada has entered into a reciprocal arrangement with the United States postal authorities whereby Canada may take full advantage of the extensive United States air mail services connecting with points in Mexico, the West Indies, and Central and South America.

The establishment of Canada's official air post services is of comparatively recent date, but the conveyance of mail matter by air within Canada has been an actual fact for over ten years. In the early days of such transportation by air, the Post Office Department —"have usually been trained in important schools for the blind. Most of them are fellows of the Royal College of Organists; many also hold diplomas as pianists, vocalists, etc., granted by the greater academies of Music.

"It is most disheartening to those capable men to be passed over so frequently without even being interviewed by the church authorities, or allowed to compete. An explanation, if offered, of this non-recognition usually takes the form of an expression of doubt as to the ability of the candidate. Such complaints, however, are seldom made by those who have actually engaged the services of a blind organist-choir-master."

was simply an invitation to the general public to forward letters by air at the ordinary rate of postage.

Commercial aviation in Canada assumed proportions in 1927 which justified the Post Office Department in utilizing the facilities thus offered for the rapid transport of mails, not only to remote areas but between the larger centres of the population. Services of the latter type had of course to be arranged on definite time schedules and this involved a much greater expense. The beginning a service was inaugurated by which incoming British mails were taken from trans-Atlantic steamers and transported by air to Montreal, thus considerably hastening their delivery. Later, on October 1, 1928, a service of daily frequency was established between Montreal and Toronto and on the same day an international air mail route was opened between Montreal, P. Q. and Albany, N. Y. On July 15, 1929, the Montreal-Toronto route was extended, by Canadian Airways, Limited, to Hamilton, London, and Windsor, Ont., and thus a point of contact with the United States air mail routes scattered was established, in addition to providing these densely populated portions of Ontario with speedy air mail service. On the same date an air mail connection with southern air mail routes was provided by the establishment of daily service between Toronto and Buffalo, N.Y., notwithstanding the difficulties of operation in the International Province—scarcity of suitable landing fields, mountainous areas, broken country, and fog—the Postmaster General sustained a service daily in December, 1929, between Montreal and Quebec, Montreal and St. John.

The next major development in the Canadian Air Mail Service was the inauguration of the trans-prairie route on March 2, 1930. Planes are now operating daily between Winnipeg, Regina, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat, Calgary and between Regina, Saskatoon, North Battleford, and Edmonton on a schedule which clips a full 24 hours off the transcontinental movement of Canadian Mails. This route not only constitutes a marked advance, but wards the coast to coast service which is being developed rapidly by the aerial revolutionaries inter - communication between the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba.

Next in the outlying portions of the country, however, the first considerable work of Canada's air mail service has been carried out. Until recently the remote settlements along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, Anticosti and the Magdalen islands in the gulf of St. Lawrence, and along the sub-Arctic reaches of the Mackenzie River, have been almost cut off from the outside world during the winter months. Communication was necessarily by a dog team and other primitive methods until the recent dramatic change in swift communication produced the duration of mail trips from weeks to hours.

The establishment of contract air mail service in the Mackenzie River District—one most northerly of all air mail services—in December, 1929, attracted world-wide attention. The route from McMurry, down the Athabasca River, along the south shore of Great Slave Lake, and down the mighty Mackenzie River is 1,700 miles long. Hitherto, in winter months, dog teams had been the sole means of communication, and the volume of mail was correspondingly small being limited to letters and a few newspapers. The total amount for Aklavik in the winter of 1928-29 was less than 200 pounds. Contrast this with the remarkable conditions obtaining on the advent of air mail facilities. Ten thousand pounds of mail were carried on the first trip—over 1,000 pounds alone for Aklavik at the mouth of the Mackenzie.

The chief remaining routes are those which penetrate the rich mining areas of Ontario and Manitoba, that is Red Lake Kinkaking and Bissett. They are the principal mineral areas served by air mail in Canada.

The development of flying fields and provision of lighting facilities, not to mention the constant improvements in aircraft which may be expected during the next few years, will undoubtedly go much to facilitate the performance of regular scheduled air mail services within Canada. Meanwhile the efficiency percentages maintained by the different operating companies are remarkably high. In addition to holding the world's record for speed over controlled air mail lines, the Canadian service proudly boasts that it has never lost a single piece of mail out of the hundreds of tons that have been entrusted to it.

MORE IMPORTANT THAN THE MOTOR

Brakes Have An Important Place to Fill in Car

It is rather hard for the average motorist today to realize the necessity of having good brakes, according to W. T. Palmer of the Russell Manufacturing Co., of Middletown, Conn.

There is, however, hardly a motorist who does not take pride in having a sweet purring motor in his automobile. There is not one of us who would drive a car very far if there were one or two cylinders that were not firing. Ten better than 60 per cent. of them drive forward at high speeds with brakes that are not "hitting" on all four wheels. It would be far safer and much less expensive to drive with a cylinder or two not firing, than it would to run your car with only one brake working.

Too little is said about the braking power of a car when it is sold. Most of the sales talk is built around the power in the motor but it is an absolute fact, nevertheless, that it is the good brakes that are the most amazing at high speeds in either city or country driving. Hundreds and even thousand and one different emergencies arrive in fast driving that require good brakes to control the car and if you do not have them, all the power in your motor would not be of much value. The first Two things are necessary in order to keep good brakes on your car and they do have to be looked after if properly applied. By this we mean that it is not enough that a car has a low friction linings and brake drums. A hard that would a soft woven lining, or worse still brakeshoe liner that will en the drum to stop the car as it is in dry, that will assure you of a very good and efficient stopping power. The second is to have the lining properly applied and kept in proper adjustment. This second feature is just as important as is the first. The modern four-speed electric brake tester makes it a very simple matter to assure oneself that his brakes are right.

In many stations such tests can be made even while the attendant is checking the oil, water and gas, as these testers are in a prominent place and the car can be driven right on to it and in a few minutes the electric motors of the tester are turning the wheels of the car, while an automatic pedal depressor applies the brakes steadily. "Then watch the four dials!" Perhaps the two rear wheels will show 850 lbs. each, while the left front shows 300 and the right front 250. The operator of the brake tester, just by looking at these dials, could then draw a picture showing you what would happen on a wet road, a greasy road, or even perhaps a dry road if you were traveling at a high speed. He would show you just how your car would pull to the left and perhaps be thrown into a dangerous skid. Sometimes it is the reverse of the car that is out of adjustment, but no matter which wheel is out the dials of the electric tester show it immediately. They also show defective equipment on a car, such as brake drums that are out of round, grease soaked linings, wheel bearings that are too tight, and in the case of hydraulic brakes, it shows piston leakage, improper balance front and rear, dragging brakes and improper setting of the cams and levers.

A RECORD

Trenton has set a record. One of the citizens of that place has dipped himself in the Bay of Quinte.

It used to be something to be proud of—to be the first to dip at Belleville into the waters of Quinte. Latterly the pride has been taking the form of a determination to be the first to get the new car out.

But a Trentonian Leo Auger has kept close to the oldtime competition, he has not forgotten nature. He even holds the record for being the last man to enter the water in the autumn. There is no doubt of his championship zeal.

SIGN OF THE ENERGETIC COUNCIL

With the handing down of the award of the tender for the construction of the bridge the city council has proved that it has meant business. These days matters of considerable import are carried through with expedition. There was once upon a time not one council but several of them that would not go at projects with such energy as the 1930 council.

The 1930 city council are nothing if not energetic and in that regard they are a model for individuals. Energy makes all the difference between success and failure. If energy is what will make the year 1930 a successful year for this city, the council guarantees then a successful year.

GRASS

Those who are in the habit of hurling matches and cigarettes and cigar stubs at random ought to think that grass is dangerous at the present time. Anything smoulder ing falling in a plot of grass is almost certain to start a fire. Anyone who travels the council sees the large tracts which have been swept by fire in the past few weeks with consequent threat to buildings.

Fire is too dangerous even in the springtime to have persons carelessly throwing lighted matches about.

THE WANDERLUST

The lure of the open road is being felt by large numbers. One has but to travel a short distance along the highways to find the large number of men on the move from one part of the country to another. That they hail passing cars is only to be expected.

There was a time when the spring fever sent men to the railway lines and yards. Today fewer take that way. They go to the highway and get rapid transportation from one part of the province to another.

But not all men on the highways are the tramping fraternity, who feel the wanderlust at all times of the year and most of all in the spring and the summer season. Well dressed men and youths are seen on the roads making their way from town to town or out for a walk in the bracing spring air.

This spring fever for taking to the broad and open road is general wherever men and women are found for women as well as men seek the delights of the great outdoors.

CANADIAN FORTS

Canada stands the risk through lack of a past of many centuries of allowing what historic remains she has to disappear. There is the case of Fort Henry at Kingston. The Mail and Empire discussing the matter and the preservation of forts including this old fortress speaks as follows:-

"There is a certain amount of romance attached to old forts, the older the better, and it is well to cultivate that sentiment in this material age. Toronto is not the only place with a fort in a condition of neglect which is resented by thoughtful citizens. By a strange coincidence similar protests on similar grounds have arisen in a half a dozen other places in Canada. Fort Henry, built at Kingston after the war of 1812, has many interesting historical associations but the stone walls are crumbling into ruins. A movement is now on foot to restore this and other historic spots around Kingston. The people of Edmonton regret that they allowed old Fort Edmonton to be destroyed so recently as in 1915. It was built originally 135 years ago and the last of the buildings that composed the fort was torn down to make roop for the site of the new Parliament buildings. The chief timbers, however, were preserved and Premier Brownlee announced recently in the Legislature that the Government intended to rebuild a duplicate of the old fort and to use it as the basis of a provincial museum. He added that the "Bad Lands" of the Red Deer valley from which so many mammoth fossil specimens have been removed in late years, would also be taken under the protection of the Government of Alberta. It has been a matter for regret that the people of Winnipeg did not preserve the historical value of old Fort Garry and allowed it to be destroyed. We believe, however, that the places which still have forts, even if they are in ruins, are awakening to their importance. That sentiment should be cultivated and capitalized and the most made out of it especially the city of Toronto."

Use is being made of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. for the distribution of Kawartha Lakes literature in the temporary railway information bureau in Exhibition Park, Toronto. Both railways have been furnished with airplane views of Peterborough and the lake district and with reading material for their publications. PROFANITY is a sign of paucity of language—command of slanguage and swear words is no sign of erudition, rather the reverse. Youths on street corners and in pool rooms like to talk loud and swear copious but other folks don't think they should have to listen to such outpourings. A change is in order and a word to the wise should be sufficient.

SOON BE TIME for the general public to see the parks and Victoria Park will be the mecca of many. Seems too bad that the Parks Board should be faced with needless expense in repairing damages caused during the winter by hoodlums to the park buildings. As the parks and buildings belong to the citizens everyone should be on guard to prevent any such hoodlianism and promptly report any evidence to the authorities so that punishment can be meeted out.

"I NEVER RECEIVED such an insulting letter in my life," wrote a woman subscriber in response to a circular request from the publisher of the old home town weekly. Aussie Women are Urged to Use Wool

Sydney, Australia, April 15 (CP).—"The time has arrived when the Australian woman must use more wool," says the National Council of Women and with the co-operation of the various women's organizations it is hoped to impress on housewives the necessity of regarding the "Use More Wool" campaign as one of national importance. It is not a question of what the Parisien women is wearing or what is the vogue in London, according to the Secretary of the Golden Fleece Exhibition. It is a question of Australia—and asks that every woman wear more wool. It will be a severe test of stores in Sydney have a fascination for Miss Australia that mere facts and statistics cannot break down.

"I don't think we will be lacking in support," the secretary added. "Women are ready to face facts, and they will be prepared, not only to wear more wool, but to suggest more ways in which wod can be used. The associations have pledged this. We are facing the same situation that was faced in the war, and the call to arms of today is of no less importance." "The exhibition," said C. Lloyd Jones, "will be the first step to make Australia wool-conscious. We hope that the campaign will spread from State to State."

APRIL ESCAPADE - - -

Odes of smothered mirth. And then for a good-night, Mary Kate drew her brother's hard young cheek close to her own soft fragrant one in the dark, and whispered passionately

"Mart, if I could only do for you what you do for me! You're so wonder ful. If I could only make a thousand dollars some way, or half that and give it to you, and let you go off to Berlin with old van Antwerp—"

"Oh, shucks, forget it I oughtn't to have told you!"—

"But I can't forget it, Mart. And it seems so mean for Gus and me to be happy, when you will have to go plug ging on here—"

"I'll have lots of other chances."

Mary Kate released him, sticking stubbornly to her point.

"I don't care. It's not fair!"

Her last thought, dropping off to sleep, veered suddenly from Gus to her mother. Mother would be mollifying and mild in the morning, and it behooved Mary Kate to be stiff. This was the only way to manage mother, when she got into one of these dismal, remote, superior moods. Mother, who could be the simplest, most hospitable, most generously self-sacrificing of all the saints could also rise to heights of unreasonableness where ice, her natural affections, her sense of humor, her sense of duty, were alike forgotten. But of late years her older children had found themselves more than a match for her.

So the next morning Mary Kate presented a cold, passive exterior to her mother's purposely affectionate eye, and departed for the office after an elaborately slighted breakfast, and a few grudging but emphatic polite monosyllables. The O'Hara household was in its usual uproar, but the confusion was not so great but what Mary O'Hara was keenly conscious of her daughter's mood.

The front room upstairs was rented to Gertrude and Fanny Lahey, trained nurses, who only occasionally used it, being popular in their profession, and hard workers. Both the Laheys were away now, and the room locked. In the back room slept Regina and Tess on a flat double bed, and Mary Kate on a couch. Mart had the hall room; the only other room on the upper floor was a bathroom, smelling of wet wood and plumbing and strong soaps. Mrs. O'Hara, Pat and Terry slept downstair.

Mary Kate had to leave the breakfast hubbub only half-spent. She departed with several warnings to her small sisters regarding the dishes and the parlor's Saturday cleaning, and walked downtown in mild March weather, Martin beside her.

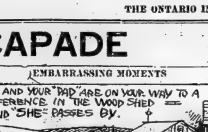
They noted with satisfaction the clearing of spring for a big apartment house at the corner.

"Two-three and four-room suites, Mart. Maybe they'll be cheap enough for Gus and me!"

"One of the fellows here last night was telling that they'll begin at seventy. Electric refrigeration, you know, and elevators—"

"Oh, help!" But she found instant consolation. "Mart, Mart, don't you make Mother's property much more valuable!"

"I ought to!"



They parted, as usual, at the big cool doorway of her office building. Mary Kate nodded and bowed to two or three other girls, in the elevator. She knew them, but not intimately. She was Dan Rountree's personal and private clerk, and she took associate, except casually and accidentally with the other girls in the Rountree employ.

Gordon Rountree, one of three brothers, was not in the family firm. He was an elegant idler, a bachelor, approaching sixty. He played golf, he was liked all over the world, he had an apartment in Paris. Sometimes he did not come into the single room, that was his office, in the big business building, for weeks at a time.

Two semi clerks, old Joseph Delaney and young Joseph Delaney, were wives children and grandchildren. Mary Kate knew well, took care of Mr. Gordon Rountree's interests, and Mary Kate O'Hara helped them. Honoria Mabley, in charge of the outer office of Rountree Brothers, outside of the big office loft, kept a general eye on Mary Kate.

This morning there was nobody in the office, not an unusual situation on a Saturday morning, for young Mr. Delaney was often busy then, down at the Rountree estate in the neighborhood of San Joe, and old Mr. Delaney did not always come into town for the half day.

Mary Kate had put away her hat and coat, and powdered her nose, and pinned on her cuffs, and was busy with the mail, when the door opened without ceremony, and Mr. Christopher Steynes came in. Big fair-haired, about thirty, too well dressed, he repeated this morning the vaguely unpleasing impression she had had of him yesterday.

CHAPTER X

"Miss O'Meara," he said.

"O'Hara" substituted Mary Kate instantly.

"I'm sorry." He did seem disturbed. Was it O'Hara yesterday?" he asked. His lips went up at the corners.

"It's always been."

"I must try to remember it," said Mr. Steynes. He sat down, at an angle, close to Mary Kate's typewriter table, and she turned about slightly in her chair and faced him. "Others may be old to Kentucky," he hummed. "I wanted to ask you, before any of the men come in," he began without preamble. "Have you thought over what we were talking about yesterday?"

"There was nothing to think over," said Mary Kate.

"Oh, yes, there was! It was a question of telling your mother, do you remember?"

Mary Kate's proud, suspicious face wore a slightly worried expression. Her eyes were bright there was an apricot color beginning to creep up under her creamy skin.

"I tell my mother everything!" she said firmly.

"Naturally. But couldn't you tell her afterward?"

"After what?"

They both laughed, and were the better friends.

"I'm going to tell you the whole story," said Christopher Steynes, after a moment of considerations.

"Do you would!" said Mary Kate heartily tired of mystery.

"Well, here it is. Do you see?" the man began. "By the way, what is your first name?" he divered suddenly.

"My first name?"

"Yes. What is it?"

"Why, it's—it's Mary."

"Mary?"

"Yes. But what—what has that to do—"

"It couldn't be better!" he said enthusiastically.

"But what has that to do—who should you say—"

"Mary," he said, "is a name you can't forget. Lydia, now, or Denise, or Olive—you could get those mixed up. But Mary! Oh, marvelous."

Mary Kate looked at him suspiciously. She did not speak. She glanced significantly at her unfinished mail.

"Here's the situation," Christopher Steynes said hurriedly, recalled. "I simply want some fine, lovely looking girl to—Frankly, I want a girl who will be my wife, for a—" his eyes caught Mary Kate's eyes—"for the briefest im aginable period," he finished hastily.

"I hope you keep your good health and spirits," Mary Kate said, so to do that," the girl said, simply. Again they both laughed.

"Listen. It isn't as bad as it sounds," Steynes assured her placatingly.

"I should suppose not."

"I wouldn't come to you with anything as low as that," the man protested. "It is, it's simply this. There's a woman and her daughter coming to town next Thursday, that's the last day I can stay, and—for various and sons into which I won't go, Miss—Miss Mary—I want them to think that I was married about a month ago."

Suddenly from rather disliking him, she rather liked him. There was some thing disarming about the simple yellow-headed creature. The thought of money was inseparable from him—golf, ponies, tutors, travel, privilege spoke all over him. But he was nice here.

"Why can't you just tell them you're married?"

"They wouldn't believe it for one second. I tell you they're Russian aristocrats—they're desperate," said Christopher Steynes.

"Oh? And which?" Mary Kate danced. "Which wants to marry you."

"Both, I imagine," he confessed disconsolately. "Now you see, I'm sailing for Europe on Sunday, a week from tomorrow," he pursued. That is, I was, I have passage engaged. But before yesterday I was informed from New York—by a New Yorker—that Madam Yarnouska and Marka are on my trail; they are crossing the ocean timent now, and have engaged passage on the same ship."

"Then it wouldn't do any good if you did spring a wife on them, for they would find out immediately that she wasn't existing. I don't suppose—" Mary Kate asked, writing swift lifting of amused blue eyes, that your contract would call for the wife to go along?"

"You completely misunderstand me, I want someone that I can intrude in as my wife. I then move my sailing to the next boat, which leaves eleven days later. They don't change their sailing, for their is nothing to gain by it. Once thoroughly convinced that I am married, I don't suppose even a Russian countess would bother me. Do you? Do you know anything about them?"

"There are only four on our block," the girl explained.

He had a wild fresh laugh; she decerned it in her secret soul as an idiot laugh, but she rather liked it. He joined it suddenly now, and gave himself and his chair a little jerk nearer her, and settled down with a fresh access of confidence and affability.

"Now, listen, here's what I'd want you to do. Gordon Rountree is a prince you can trust him. Will you concede that?"

He laughed. And remembering how her employer had sat with her while she was ill last summer, and his polite thanks whenever anyone stayed ten minutes late to do anything for him, and the half-salary gift at Christmas time, so tactfully recorded on a book or with a handkerchief, she nodded willingly.

"Agreed. All right then! Gordon Rountree has a place down in Burling ame, right near the sea. I rented for the polo. You're acquainted with Burlingame? It's some twelve or fifteen miles down the Peninsula, south of the city. You know it, of course. Now I'm a stranger down there, nobody knows much about me—they're all terribly decent to me, and all that, but I mean that none of them would be very much surprised to hear I was married do you see?

"Gordon Rountree gives the Countess and Marka a dinner next Friday night, do you get me? And the next day I give them a luncheon at my house. The day after that they take the Overland for New York and then Russia and it's all over.

"All I ask you—I mean, all I ask anyone to do, is to come to that dinner, sleep overnight at my house—I rented a swell old English house-keeper and her husband with the place and don't keep her month and then play wife again at luncheon the next day."

"Were you engaged to this Russian woman?" Mary Kate asked, thinking it the kindest way.

"This time I was—"

"Has she"—Mary Kate was a movie fan. "Has she letters?"

"Some—"

"Are they —incriminating?"

"No. Oh, Lord no!" said Christopher Steynes. "But they're rather private.

"You see, I really did take a terrible fall for this girl—by the way she speaks perfect English," he interpolated. "So we couldn't get away with any addies!"

"You'd better get you?"

"I mean that whoever entered into this little masquerade with me," he said succinctly, "couldn't afford to count on their not understanding anything, for they understand everything! To go back, I met Marka in Paris, and it got out of theatrical party. There are lots of Russians on the loose all over Europe!

and everyone is driven to them—buying their jewels, and jollying them along, and all that. So when I met this girl, and really she is stunning—I began to lay it on pretty thick. In the first place I didn't imagine she'd understand American slang, do you see?—So I'd call out to Pa-Curran—it was at his place—I'd call out to him, "I'm crazy about you!" Where has she been all my life! I'm getting on gier nicely with Miss Rimanoff!" and so on.

"Well, of course she took it—dared recklessly, he also went on. Mary Kate widening his eyes. "In the first place, she was dismissly connected with the Imperial family and they wanted to get this all straightened out. Then she asked me if I would come the next day and have tea, at twelve o'clock. It seems they have sort of bethrothal teas—can you be it?"

"Heavens!" said Mary Kate, her face whitening with sympathy.

"Well, you can imagine. You see a girl like that—she's about twenty-seven she was seventeen at the time of the war, a girl like that doesn't expect to know her young man very well. It's just go to be a suitable arrangement, with plenty of money. She's been hang ing about the world for ten years and looking for something soft, and she thinks she's found it."

"Do you like her?"

"I loathe her! However, I didn't tell you all this when I went to their place next morning, thinking there would be a regular gang there, and I was the whole guy!! There were some elderly relatives, and cakes, and some old servants kissed my hand, and you I was stampeded! So I got out of there— this was last December, and I sailed on the Adriatic two days later!

"And now they follow you?"

"They have followed me there. They were on the ship. I don't know how they knew, or how they made the arrangements, but they did. The old man, and the Countess would get into my room, and play bezique with me—she was fascinating, well—he made something that way, but she was welcome to it, and when we got to Paris and New York, she asked me when we should give the glad tidings to the papers."

"It's a pity, and a tall tale while you're about it," said Mary Kate drily with a little laugh, and it's every syllable true! On my honor."

"Why that's horrible!" the girl said indignantly.

"I'm glad you see it that way. Well I studied her all on the way," Christopher Steynes resumed, by telling her that there was a girl down South there, whom I wanted to marry. There was, too. You know Russians will take a lot of that, because everything with them is formal—arranged by the higher ups. So I cut away again, now—I want you to play that girl."

She had laughed out, two or three times, during the recital, had frowned thoughtfully over bread. Her eyes had flashed anger and interest. Now she said considerably, but in a more friendly tone, "I'd have to ask my mother."

"Then you'll do it!" said Christopher Steynes.

"I'll tell you it is a perfectly cold-blooded proposition," he said. "I know that I'm not interesting to you in that, I'm not in the least interested in you. I'm not in any girl. I've never been in love with anyone—consequently, I never follow them up. You don't believe that it's true?"

"I don't —suppose —there's a chance with my mother," Mary Kate said, considering.

"Of course there isn't! But in the first place you'd be in a perfectly respectable favor, it'd be a work of holy Christian charity," he pleaded. "And —are you enough interested when I say that I'm not in the least-interested in you. I'm not in any girl. I've never been in love with anyone—consequently, I never follow them up. The Beauty Box

(By Helen Fallcit)

Beauty specialists tell me nothing but the tenderest, tiniest hair will have a few facial treatments you must keep on having them or you will get terrible wrinkles, that electricity used for the removal of superfluous hair makes more hairy grow, that applying peroxide all to legs will reduce them, that rubbing a stye with a gold wedding ring will make it evaporate, that dead ends of the hair are cut, the hair bleeds.

The arch of the eyebrow should not be exactly in the centre, but more toward the inner end. When the eyebrows are narrowed, made thinner, hairs underneath should be weeded out, rather than those above. The faint hairline is out of style. It should never have been in, as it makes the face expressionless. If not bald.

When the eyelashes are dyed, a piece of pasteboard cut the shape of a crescent is placed under the eye, and the lashes rest upon it. The coloring agent is applied with a fine camel's hair brush. Only a skilled operator should attempt this treatment because of the danger of dye dropping into the eyes.

You Can Ward Off Child Diseases

BY CONSTANCE CAMERON

A woman remarked somewhat resentfully about a friend: "Emma is out of quarantine today, after being housed up with three cases of measles since before Christmas. They surely do pin them up tight in New York State.

"More power to New York State! They don't do it here."

No, they don't do it here.

"Here," being a small place where to illustrate the progress made since the Civil War I quote a remark made by one of the city fathers only some years ago. A man had suggested a plan for something in the town government. An old resident listened in grim and belligerent silence until the man had finished. Then he rose and announced with defiance: "You can't come here and tell us how to run our town." "THIS in the year of our Lord 1928!

As pertains to quarantining things have progressed at pretty much the same rate. And I don't believe this town is unique in its attitude toward care of contagious diseases.

Fall and through several months of the Winter a whole school slowly melted away with whooping cough until only one or two pupils were left at a time to continue their studies. "They all have to have it some time," is the easy attitude of both parents and others concerned.

Now, that is one statement which always makes me bristle all over. Because, begging your pardon, neighbor, children do not have to have all the diseases that our forefathers allowed them to contract during childhood!

It may be that I feel more strongly on this point than many others because if some mother, or perhaps a teacher, or perhaps a health officer, had been a little more diligent when scarlet fever was rampant one Spring, I would still have the privilege of watching my daughters play see her smile and have the glow of presenting

DEAR READERS:

Since our column started we have talked mostly on clothes, because just at this season of the year clothes are uppermost in a women's mind, and she is busily engaged in getting together her Easter outfit. The weather is now becoming dangerously warm and our Winter clothes will soon look decidedly out of the picture, so dear reader, if your costume is not yet picked out, get busy at once, and if our little articles of the past few days have helped you to your decisions we are very, very happy. We have left the discussion of shoes until today, now because they are the least important item in your wardrobe. Far from it, they head the list and require the most careful attention and selection. The shoe of today is just as important as the hat, and if you do not consider it so, you should suffer a change of opinion to be well and fashionably dressed, dear reader.

The most important feature to be noted in this season's shoe fashions is that the shoe will match some shade of colour in the costume. Isn't this a delightful idea? For instance you may wear a brown kid shoe to match a belt, hat, or cuffs and collar. You will find no difficulty in matching up shoes in this manner, because the modern shoe is made in almost any wanted shade. The reptilian leathers will be worn more than ever this year, and shoes of lizard, snake, lawn, and black and white combinations are as smart as the heart of the most exacting women could desire. The watermake shoes in "allover" or combination colorings are also good, and colored kid is popular. Brown on the whole, is receiving the most favour for Spring wear; and if this shade matches your costume by all means buy it, dear reader, for you will be purchasing the most favoured of styles. "Almoran" brown is the most admired shade and rightly so, for it is a beautiful brown, and not entirely new touch in this popular colour. It is closely followed by copper brown, and later in the season beige and sunlan will replace them. Never in the history of the shoe has women been offered such a wide variety in design, material, cut, and color, and you will find it fairly an "impossibilion" to pick out a shoe which will match your costume, and accommodate your pocketbook.

Fashionably yours

SEED PACKAGE

I can sell you wonder
For a thin and silver dime!
I can sell you magic
For the coming summertime!
Here within those envelopes
So tiny, slender, slim,
There is of glory hidden
Enough for seraphim!
Only and gold galardia
And canterbury bell
To swing a swaying melody
For fay feet in a dell.
Here are fluted, hollyhocks
Forget-me-not and rue,
Calendula and moon-loved phlox
Larkspur and cornflower blue.
I can give you wonder
For a round and little dime
I can bring enchantment
To the coming summertime.

Fashion Flashes

Spring coats. The most important are black splash. Bands of this sleek black fur are found developing cuffs, banding collars and capelets, and decorating sleeves on models of all colors. There is something distinctly tailored and real about splash, that has given it enviable popularity in this late 1930 mode. It is not then surprising to learn that the best seller of this smart coat is of black splash.

31 TOTAL FATALITIES

Albuquerque, New Mexico, April 16—The death toll of the Isleta railroad crossing tragedy of last Friday in which the Santa Fe train demolished a transcontinental bus today stood at 31, with the death here, of Tom Melo, a Domingo Indian. A Day Spent in a Sugar Bush

A few days ago the sugar-bush of Mr. Frank J. Knight was visited by his sister Mrs. Farley of Belleville and a number of her friends also a brother C. O. Knight and wife from Saskatchewan who have been spending the winter in Belleville and Toronto.

A number of the party had never seen a sugar-bush in operation before, and it was therefore somewhat of a new experience for them especially the preparation of a dinner under such conditions and only to be thoroughly enjoyed by the participation of and assisting in getting it ready and the novelty of the whole process.

In the first place the potatoes and onions are covered nicely in the hot ashes under the furnace, then the coffee made from partly boiled sap is put on to steep and by this time the men have the wooden forks made from green beech limbs and then after the sliced ham is placed firmly on them the cooking begins by holding them close to the fire in the furnace and when your face takes on a bright ruddy hue you know the ham is done, the ham is about cooked and as each one completed to cook their own is a very interesting part of the program.

About this time the potatoes and onions are thoroughly roasted in the ashes, the coffee and boiled eggs are ready and every one has an appetite that would delight a lumberjack related only as those who have partaken of it can vouch for.

During the day several snaps were taken of the sugar-bush and the old beech tree cons to a total of the amount of admiration with initials of lovers which have been made up of just such parties.

Then before leaving, the sugar-pot filling on a fire, the syrup made and the sugar is boiled it is poured over the snow and every one eats taffy to their hearts content.

The day is over and everyone goes away with a feeling that to for a real outing there is nothing that can just compare with a day spent in a sugar-bush.

Cost of Living Is Doubled in China

Peiping, China, April 16—Foreigners living in China have had a theoretical increase of 50 per cent in their salaries during the past year, on account of the collapse of their exchange, if they are paid in gold, but when they figure it out they are no better off than before the fall of silver, as their cost of living steadily increased under tariff autonomy. Under the old treaties, import rates were kept low. The Chinese government, bring now free to impose whatever rates it likes, is making generous use of the privilege.

The cost of living for foreigners in China, according to conservative estimates, has doubled in the past few years. This was where one of the chief countries of the world in which to live.

It is now rapidly taking its place among the most expensive nations. Wages are also rising, although not so rapidly, and good servants are becoming steadily more expensive.

Foreigners who are paid in silver are worse off than ever before, as they must not only meet the higher living costs but must convert their savings into gold as a heavy depreciation over previous exchange rates.

Gone Feminine the SPORTS MODE

By GRETCHEN THOMSON

The flounce, in which every phase of fashion appears, is the outline trend of the moment is strikingly illustrated in sports apparel, and while it is doubtful if we will ever see ladies playing tennis in hoop-skirts—it cannot be denied that the extreme boyishness of the sports mode is past history. The greatest point of difference between sports and town wear is the skirt length, for town wear four inches below the knees is the accepted length while sportsters skirts may be four to six inches below the knee.

As to silhouette there are four particular types to consider—the suit, the coat, the one-piece dress and the sweater. With all the ingenuity of design centered on suits this year there is no danger of the sports costume being labelled "just another cardigan" for fashion points with pride to the many new interpretations. The tuxedo jacket is the most interesting version, and its ways of achieving variety are numerous.

Its main qualification is its resemblance to the man's "tux", though it features squareg or notch lapels or slender roll collar. The other trend closing in like effect is the general rule and the lower edge is rounded at the front. Sometimes the severe style is preferred with a boyish blouse and the pleats of the skirt contributing to the tailored aspect. Sometimes more softened effects are sponsored, heightened by the tuxedo-tie treatment of the blouse and the soft gathers or pleating suggestion of the skirt. In either case, the fabrics such as the rough tweeds, the herringbone and mixtures of the more summery mesh, such a the pastel shades, linen of Ripple or cord. The bolero or eton jacket is also a distinctive type which may be depended upon to appeal to youth.

The Shirtwaist Frock

The shirtwaist frock is the newest sports frock—in fact no summer wardrobe can be really smart without at least one or two. They are made of striped silk, shirting, shantung, pique, and other of the new cotton or silk sports fabrics with fr ted front or gilet effect to match the jacket. Another important tailored st is the sleeveless dress with jacket to match—of harmonizing darker tone in entire contrast—with bows or other details that emphasize the feminine influence.

Sweaters and Blouses

Peplums on sweaters and jackets, short overblouses with bell-like hemline, the "muscle" sleeve, the cardigan with waistline tucks, the rever treatment which leaves the back of the neck collarless, thus eliminating bulk when the sweater is worn under a topcoat are details that make sweaters more appealing than ever. Cotton mesh blouses that compromise between the sweater and the blouse are ideal for golfers. Sleeveless short sleeved and long sleeved styles are favored for the country. The puffed brief sleeve has also been sponsored in this fabric, while the tuck-in vies with the short overblouse with nipped-in waistline.

Coats

The cape theme and scarf treatments, the semi-princess, the wrap around coat that lies flat across the front (of Vionnet inspiration), and the straight-line belted coat are of great style importance.

In materials, the monotoned tweeds and rough woolens, diagonals, basket weaves, worsteds, and cheviots are the favorites.

Fur trimming is noticeable by its absence in the majority of cases while most of the coats which do have fur trimming favor the flat furs such as galyak, broadtail, leopard and caracul. Sleeves come in for a great deal of attention either by their fullness below elbow or the never shaped, extremely deep cuffs and button trimmings. As in town coats, seaming and intricate tailoring give most of the sport coats their greatest charm.

How A College Athlete Keeps Himself Well

Bob Duncan of College, claims that a sensible method of health has really been his life a pleasure for him. Mr. Duncan says that at first he could not believe this simple thing was the cause of his buoyant spirits. Finally, however, he had to admit that it was Nujol which was keeping him well, besides giving him, as he says, "five times the vitality."

"Believe me," he says "leaving free and regular bodily elimination makes all the difference in the world to a diver as well as to any other athlete. I can't afford to be nervous, sluggish, or depressed while diving. It just don't do. I would like to urge any one, whether they think they are in good health or not, to give Nujol a try-out. It certainly can't do any harm, and I'll bet it would make them feel a hundred per cent better. It's worth trying!"

Mr. Deming has just about told the whole story. He is right in believing that Nujol contains no drugs, no medicine of any kind. It is flavored to tickle the taste of your palate.

It is impossible to say anything further, for the man was tumbling on his story in a torrent of words.

Before he had finished she knew that her story would never be told. In the light of his success she felt a failure.

They were just two ordinary persons walking along the street somewhere, stopped the man with a fresh faced young woman, but you could somehow the impression of a person following them, applause going on all the while, behind them—a world's appreciation of success.

GIRL UNAFRAID

Ken Asserts Himself

Ken had begun to pace the room. Now he turned on a speaker and said, "Yes—I can't give up this expensive apartment. Get a small place I can afford to pay the rent on. Manage with one maid. Cut out some of my expensive friends!"

"I suppose—" she put in contemptuously, "you'd like me to live and dress like a shop girl. Shop girls appear to be your ideal."

From beneath her lashes she studied the result of this shot. Ken's mouth contracted. She saw the outline of his jawbone grow hard under the skin. But he crushed back the angry words before they formed. A resolve—that was what she wanted. A scene—like the hundreds which had gone before. When she'd flung Arden's name at him. Not that! He wouldn't stand that again.

He paced the room in silence.

A large room this, modern and filled with the superficial glitter which naturally collected about the intimate background of Cecile.

Summer furniture, slanting between orchid silk drapes, struck rainbow gleams from the cut-glass appointments of the bottle on the vanity. An army of bottles and jars. They covered the top of the dressing table, and were overflowed to a small glass-covered stand. A carved balustrade divided the room, and Ken knew that the green and lavender bathroom held as many more behind its wall cabinets.

Like a Beauty Salon

Satin pillows, massage creams, formaldehyde ointment, cleansing cream, bath salts and perfumed oils. Part of what surrounded the ivory maid which turned Cecile's complexion startling shades to match various gowns. Brilliantine and eyelash-paint. Heavy Oriental perfume in an amber glass bottle. Flower perfume in a rose or pink bottle.

Enough cosmetics. Ken found himself thinking, to stock a small drug store.

He hated this room with a vigorous if secret, hatred. Too brilliant..... too overdone..... The triple-mirrored vanity mirror..... the affected white linens—like ladies-started dress parade on the tattefa cushions on the bed.

That girl crawls at his attention unpleasantly. Ugly screaming curtains with its lone snakey bed..... He hated the expression of eye in the woman painted on its silk face. Why did women favor grotesque, unreal pictures. Hair of yellow silk floss, painted in the center and stiff with rock demureness each side of the oval face. Dared if the thing didn't look something like Cecile!

He tried to crush the disloyal thought as it rose but the comparison was so apt that he had the impulse to shout with nervous laughter.

He found himself sicly eyeing her. Cecile had returned to the bathroom. She was fresh from the hands of her maid, her brown plaits coiled to a thin line and darkened with pomade. Her lips outlined in hard orange. Her upper lids had been touched with mauve tinted salve so that they shone mistily in the morning light. She wore an elaborate suit of lounging pajamas of ivory satin trimmed with ecru lace—an orange bib. Ken reflected grimly, which probably cost more than his whole month's income.

That brought the old grievance to his mind again. After they married he had innocently imagined that he and Cecile would put along on the salary he earned in her father's firm. He was rather elated at this. But Cecile had spent money before, she revolted in it now.

But—It's Her Money

It was her money which furnished this elaborate apartment of eight rooms; which paid the rent, kept it running. The thought galled Ken. He was no cringer in all this affluencing magnificence. It gave Cecile the upper hand. Made her defiant when her own wishes were crossed.

Wearily he took up the task he dreaded, assailed his one winning smile. "Aw, Cecile, please let's be sensible about this. You know why I don't want you to go to Cora-lee's house party at this particular time. Dancing all night. And the way they play cards—that heavy entertainment ain't good for your right now." And you know what the doctor said—that for the next few months you'd have to be careful."

He stopped, such cold white fury locked out of her face.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A DAUGHTER'S SECRET

By

Maxine McBride

Copyright, 1929, International Feature Service, Inc

The girl, for she was still that in spite of her years when terror old and wise, slipped out into the dusky street between the big double-backed main doors of the store. She stood poised against the doors, and there was something about her in the sure nonchalance that reminded you of an actress, a highly successful actress who has slipped out between the curtains to take a bow.

Almost you heard the tides of applause rushing towards her, saw a spotlight spinning a rosy aura about her. And then the luminous moment receded, and she was nothing more than a tired, sunned young customer. Nothing more than a shabby young woman with eyes that were much old er than her skin, who had loitered for a moment to pull on her gloves in front of a department store.

She was thinking—

"Well now its the suburbs.....buy a southern colonial house near a golf course where father can play. Maybe a Mediterranean cruise for my vacation. Father can go in for collecting pewter in a solid way. He always did like pewter."

She relieved herself of it had been a long, long time since her father had bought his last shining bit of pewter before the black days of the crash—both of his health and his finances.

Sometimes when she was tired it seemed as if she had always been working for two things, her own and her father's. That there had never been a time when she had been free from worry over something. When she hadn't thought for two.

Her father had been as sick as broken when he had first failed and somehow in spite of all that she had done for him, he had remained like a light that had hopelessly guttered out.

She had pulled him along with her own glowing health and spirits. Tend ed, nursed, and protected him. Thought of everything for him. There was nothing that he had ever wanted in these last years that she had not given him. She had been a wonderful daughter, she said so.

She had gone to work at-the store when her back was still sore from the ....in the "handkerchiefs" in the bargain basement. Those were lean, terrible days.....when she had walked back and forth to work each day, eight miles, to save subway nickels. They had needed those pitiful nickels so then literally she had sealed her lips against—until now—the taste of the top of the pile. A success.

She must play very carefully her announcement of this great success to her father. Not that he would be jealous of it, no. Not he proud and excited, but the contrast between the course of their lives on two married.

She could see him now. He would be padding quietly about the house, going to the window every now and then and looking out to see if she were coming. His gray hair standing over his eyes, like a sad old setter's, his hands trembling a little in his eagerness to be of help around the house.

He had hunted jobs with feverish intensity during the first years of his "resting," although she had told him it wasn't at all necessary, that she loved taking care of him. He never got the jobs he hunted, and of late years he had quested only unmedicinal beer—which she was glad and too.

But he wouldn't be able to keep from comparing his status to hers. He would try to hide it from her, but she would know, and he would know that she knew.

So she must be casual about it, although something within her burned to tumble it all out breathlessly, like a little girl. She would go on quickly to plan for the future, jobs about his becoming a country squire. Dwell on the wonderful thought that he need never have another worry about work. Need never clip another employment and in paper, hunch another aspirer now ever again in his life feel the pressure to do so.

She moved away from the store stepping into the glitter and rush and misery of the city. The furred sleeve of her coat caught on the rough edge of a brang and she wheeled around to face a "sandwich man" mirror man beside her.

He looked down at the young woman beside him as if from heights. Her eyes were ecstatic, young. He but his placard like a banner.

"Father—" she cried out, but was impossible to say anything further, the man was tumbling on his story in a torrent of words.

Before he had finished she knew that her story would never be told. In the light of his success she felt a failure.

They were just two ordinary persons walking along the street somewhere, stopped the man with a fresh faced young woman, but you could somehow the impression of a person following them, applause going on all the while, behind them—a world's appreciation of success.

Here and There

Canadian Pacific Railway Friday night broadcasts are now being sent out across the Dominion from coast to coast. Letters are being received from all parts of Canada in appreciation of the programmes and of the artistic work of soloists in all centres. Arrangements have been made with the National Broadcasting Company of the United States to play special numbers in its programme on the air, early in April, over WJZ to thickness population centres of the Eastern United States.

Veteran of 63 years railway service and one of Canada's earliest telegraph operators, William Phillip Marlow, assistant general superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, died in Vancouver recently. He learned telegraphy from his father when a boy and became a chief dispatcher at the age of 18.

Discovery of a new species of whitefish in Clear Lake, Manitoba, is announced by A. Baker of Manitoba University. The new fish, which has been named Coregonus Odonoboue, formerly of Dr. C. H. O'Donoghue, formerly of the faculty of Manitoba University. The newly-discovered fish is common in Clear Lake. It lives at a great depth during the summer, coming to the surface only in the spawning season.

Sixty head of pedigreed cattle and sheep from the Royal estates in England will be shipped to Professor W. L. Carlyle's trip to the Guelph agricultural. Mr. Mimey does recently. They are destined for Prince Edward Island as a gift to Hon. Peter Mackay, and as a further proof of His Majesty's interest in improving Canadian live stock.

"As far as the army is concerned," the horse will be in museum piece within the next 20 years," said Brig-General Sir J. E. B. Seely, recent arrival on S.S. Empress of Asia, after a trip during which he inspected regiments of the British army in Canada. Seely added that the mechanization of the army was taking rapid strides and, though a costly operation, would pay for itself by decreased maintenance charges within a period of five years.

New Brunswick has an estimated population of 418,000, according to the twelfth annual report of the chief medical officer of the provincial department of health tabled in the Legislature recently. An interesting detail of the report was the statement that during the past year more than 25,000 persons had been permanently immunized against diphtheria.

Surest sign of spring in Eastern Canada is the running of the sap in the maple trees. This annual harvest is now on and last year the total value of maple sugar and maple syrup produced in Canada was $6,118,856. This money accrues mostly to farmers and the province of Quebec is the leader of the industry in Canada.

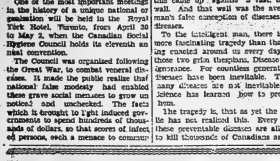
CANADIAN SOCIAL HYGIENE MEETS AT TORONTO

National Organizations Plan for Entire Dominion

One of the most important meetings in the history of a unique national organization will be held in the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, from April 30 to May 2, when the Canadian Social Hygiene Council holds its eleventh annual convention.

The Council was organized following the Great War, to combat venereal diseases. It made the public realize that national false modesty had enabled these grave social menaces to grow un noticed and unchecked. The facts which it brought to light induced governments to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, so that scores of infected persons, each a menace to community health, have since been given treatment, who would otherwise have had none.

And then the Council found itself obliged to change its direct attack. For this came up against a vast, blank wall. And that wall was the average man's false conception of diseases. All diseases.



To the intelligent man, there is no more fascinating tragedy than that being enacted around us every day, by those two grim therapists, Disease and Ignorance. For countless generations, disease have been inevitable. Today many diseases are not inevitable, for science has learned how to prevent them.

The tragedy is, that as yet the public has not realized this. Every year these preventable diseases are allowed to kill thousands of Canadians and to waste millions of Canadian dollars. The vital and economic wastage results, naturally, in untold social disorders, poverty and crime.

"Up against this wall, of public misconception of health and disease, the campaign against venereal disease came. It could go so far, and no further. And so the Council set about a gigantic task. It had partially changed the national attitude towards one of diseases. To complete this work, it had to enter the general field of social Hygiene. Venereal diseases are sociological phenomena, being the result of social conditions which in turn are eccentrically the result of our failure to carefully conserve life and health. To help Canada become healthy and wealthy, it had first to make Canadians wise, as regards the personal and sociological duty of preserving health.

And that is what the Council is dropping to do today. It continues to combat venereal diseases, and recent figures show that this branch of the work is progressing more surely all the time. And with the co-operation of the press, and by means of the radio, the pamphlet, lecture, exhibit, billboard it tells how diseases may be prevented, and lives and money conserved thereby. The work is purely voluntary and entirely non-commercial, supported by the Dominion and other governments, and by leading citizens from coast to coast who will gather to report progress at the Toronto convention this month.

TRAIL NAMED BY GOVERNORS LADY

MONTREAL, Que., April 15.—(By The Canadian Press)—The story of Lady Willingdon's ingenuity in connection with a journey along "Hair Pin Trail" leading out from Hudson's Hope for 90 miles. At one point something went wrong with the machine and a pin was wanted to see it right. No one had a pin. "How about a hair pin?" queried Lady Willingdon. So she produced a hair pin and the flivver proceeded on its way. At every bump in the trail Her Excellency exclaimed "Oh my hair pin!" Hence the name. The vice-regal visitor had not been half an hour at Hudson's Hope before she visited the three women there, saw their kitchens and admired their resourcefulness, something which has not been forgotten in the settlement, said Miss Harper. It is purely a trapper's district, she remarked, but one with great potentialities for anthracite, copper and oil mining.

After seeing the nine provinces, staying with farmers and settlers and not in palace hotels, Miss Harper has come to the conclusion that where there is a "breakdown" it is due to selection of settlers by Canadians in England who either do not know or have forgotten their country. "While Canada needs settlers of every type, I do not think immigration should be restricted to agricultural people," she says. I found marvellous success among settlers who never farmed before. Very often these people from the cities and towns are only one generation removed from agricultural stock, and the revision is natural one."

Miss Harper is inclined to think that the loans and land valuations under which newcomers are settled are rather too heavy. She made a plea that there should be more "public opinion" on this question among Canadians of every profession and business as well as public men.

"An interesting project is being thought over by Miss Harper. She would like to see her own type of work among the settlers established as a definite scheme, by which volunteers would visit the newcomers, bringing assistance and encouragement. Her idea is that an older woman be sent by the Red Cross Society with a girl Guide to spend six months of every year in the northern part of each province, living in their own cabin, starting Girl Guide, sewing classes, first aid, etc., and help to brighten the lives of the mothers in the remote districts. Miss Harper spoke in the terms of the women doctors who have been sent up into the Peace River country.

P.E. FARMER HURLED TO ROADSIDE

Died Early Today From Injuries In Accident Last Night

FAMILY WITNESSES

Saw Tragedy Enacted as Horse Took Fright Near Wellington

Clare MacDonald, well-known farmer of the Gilead Road, one and a half miles from the village of Wellington, died this morning at six o'clock from injuries received at seven o'clock last night when the horse which he was driving took fright, bolted down the road and hurled the occupant ten feet to the side of the road. Mr. MacDonald did not regain consciousness from the time of the accident.

Starting out shortly before seven last night the victim started for the home of Mr. Charles Shinkle and as the horse turned into the lane it reared, jumping the vehicle partly over. The driver attempted to control the animal, but he was forced to release the reins and he was dragged some distance before being thrown out. His wife and his two dead boys saw the occurrence from the house and ran to his assistance. He was brought home by neighbours. Dr. Scott of Wellington, was hurriedly called and although he worked all night he was unable to save the man's life.

Dr. Thompson, coroner, was called and after viewing the circumstances surrounding the accident, he decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

The late Mr. MacDonald was a prominent resident of the community and the news of his death was received with a shock. His wife is prostrate following the tragic affair.

In his forty-second year he was a member of the United Church and took an active part in the welfare of the township. He was born near Wellington.

Besides his wife who was formerly Miss Rowena Christie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Christie, he leaves five small children, four boys and one girl, Fred, Raynor, Mac, Bruce and Nelda. Three half brothers, Harley MacDonald of Kitchener, Ontario, Rose and Augustus of Wellington and one half-sister, Mrs. Leonard Bryant also survive. His father, Mr. Thomas MacDonald and his step-mother reside one mile from his home on the Gilead Road. The funeral will take place on Saturday of this week and interment will be made in Wellington cemetery.

Belleville Native's Case May Be Ended Before Grand Jury Today

(Canadian Press)

TOPEKA, Kansas, April 17.—Grand Jury investigation of the charge that Major Charles A. Shepard, 58 year old Denver army surgeon, formerly of Belleville, Ontario, poisoned his 57 year-old wife because of infatuation for Miss Grace Brandon, 23, of San Antonio, Texas, was expected to end here today.

Miss Brandon, a stenographer at Brookstead, Texas, where the major was stationed in 1928, was questioned for an hour and a half, yesterday, before Federal Judge Hardin Kelley, Assistant United States district attorney, said he expected to conclude the interrogation of the witnesses today after further examination of the young woman. Mrs. Shepard died in January last month, the medical officer reposedly had voiced his suspicions. She died, and, his second wife, died last summer in Fort Riley, Kansas.

Complete secrecy surrounds the testimony given the grand jury by Miss Brandon. Following the major's arrest, on a federal warrant charging murder, she denied intimate acquaintance with the officer. EXPERTS WILL EXAMINE TWO 22 CALIBRE GUNS

North Bay, Ont., April 17 (CP) — Investigations into the circumstances surrounding the death of Charles Harvey, Burk's Falls youth who, it is said, committed suicide by shooting himself with a 22 rifle after being detected kissing the wife of his employer, Ingram Smith took an unexpected turn at the inquest last night when Coroner Dr. J. E. Haight asked that the verdict be reserved until such time as two .22 rifles concerned in case and the bullet taken from young man's body are examined by experts. Accordingly rifles, one owned by Smith and the other by Harvey the dead youth, together with the bullet, have been forwarded to the Attorney General's department. It is understood they will be sent to Montreal for examination by experts. Police say both rifles contained an empty shell and also show signs of having been fired recently.

STIRLING GROUP CHEESEMAKERS OPEN SEASON

Were Highest Scorers In Entire Province Last Year

The 1930 cheesemaking season in Central Ontario got away to a good start yesterday afternoon when representatives of twenty four cheese factories in the Stirling group gathered to discuss the coming year, its problems and its promises.

Perhaps the most important thing that was brought out yesterday afternoon was the splendid record that was established during the 1929 season by this district. Stirling group was the highest scoring group in the whole of Ontario. Nine cheese factories succeeded in getting one hundred points. These included Maple Leaf, E. E. West, cheesemaker, West Huntingdon, Harry Juby, maker, Hallaway, Morris Rose, maker, Stirling Town Hall, Robert MacLaughlin, maker, Springbrook, Charles Lough, maker, Enterprise, John Donaghue, maker, Zion, John Willcannon, maker, and Beulah. Harold Henderson, maker. As well as these Stirling factory had nearly as fine a record, getting 9 points. Ashmead Bateman is maker at this factory.

Thirty one thousand five hundred and forty eight cheeses were turned out of factories in the Stirling group in 1929. Of these an average score was recorded of 98.83 percent.

Start In May

The majority of the cheese factories in the Stirling group will commence operations on May 1st. So far, none have begun to make cheese. The group will be headed by the same officers as last year. These include J. N. West, president, Evergreen factory, and W. Rogers, secretary, Shannonock factory. C. P. Linn is instructor.

The cheese makers in Centra; Ontario were urged to stand by their instructor. J. F. Griffin, of Toronto. "You are going to be unanimous" he stated, "on the splendid record that you put during 1929. Keep it up and see if you cannot do as well during the coming year."

All were urged to support the Journal "The Ontario Milk Producers and Cheesemakers Journal."

Besides Mr. Griffin, W. H. Bailey and E. L. Irwin, dairy products grader for Central Ontario, said a few words. Both complimented the group on their showing during the year.

The following is some excellent advice:

KLAN CASE MAY GO TO PRIVY COUNCIL

Hamilton, April 17.—The Oakville inquest of the Ku Klux Klansmen is an issue which may be carried to the highest court in the land.

Counsel for the "Invisible Empire" here met last night and determined upon such action, it is stated, as the result yesterday of the action of the Appellate court in Osgoode Hall, Toronto, in not only supporting the fine of $50 imposed by an Oakville Magistrate upon W. A. Phillips, local chiropractor, but increased the penalty to three months in jail.

When Klansmen met tonight in a central hall they appeared to be stunned, although some members declared openly that officials "should have known enough to let well enough alone." When the meeting was over, though it was openly declared that the appeal would be carried to the "highest court in the land." By that, it was explained, was meant the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

BUY PORTRAIT FORMER PREMIER GIFT TO NATION

Lady Perley's Intention to Present Sir John's Portrait to Archives

BUST IS BOUGHT

Interesting Time at Sale at Ottawa on Wednesday

OTTAWA, April 17.—An oil portrait and a bust of Sir John A. Macdonald, both originally the property of the late Conservative chieftain, have been purchased by Lady Perley of Ottawa, for presentation, it is understood, to the Dominion archives here.

Enquiry resulted in this statement following the announcement that the two mementoes of the great Canadian statesman were not to be put up at the auction sale by which the contents of his old home here, Earnscliffe, are now being disposed of.

Anxious to preserve the two works of art for the capital, Lady Perley, it is stated, bought them before the sale began, by special arrangement with the executors of the Macdonald estate, who are conducting the sale.

Disappointment spread through the large crowd attending the auction when it was announced that the portrait would not be put up. Among those present was Senator A. C. Hardy who, it is said, was willing to pay a high price for the picture. Senator Hardy is understood to have been intending to present it to the Rideau Club here. Several others were anxious to obtain it and, had it been auctioned, the price might have run into five figures.

The portrait, which is by Patterson, is a life-sized head and shoulders of Sir John when he was at the height of his prestige. It shows him as the elector of the seventies and eighties often saw him, according to authorities—that is, wearing a fur-collared coat and a crawl of red. The bust, also life-size, is identical with the only other one of its kind, now in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, England.

GERMANY PLANS ANOTHER CRUISER

(Canadian Press)

Berlin, April 17—The question of more naval construction in Germany has suddenly been thrown into the foreground of political discussion by an announcement in the budget committee of appropriation for such purpose.

The amendment provides about $720,000 as the first instalment for another cruiser of the famous Ersatz Preussen type. The question will come before the Reichstag after Easter.

CHICAGO GANGS UNITE TO END GANG GUNNERY

Chicago, April 17 (C.P.).—Union of Chicago's warring gangs under the single leadership of Al (Scarface) Capone was understood to have been effected. The amalgamation of the Capone and George (Bugs) Moran organizations, heretofore at odds with each other over liquor, gambling and vice traffic has for its reported purpose, ending of gang gunnery, which has been responsible for hundreds of deaths in Chicago during recent years and co-ordination of all major gang enterprises for the purposes of facilitated power and profits.

LORDS DROP DEATH PENALTY IN ARMY

London, April 17 (C.P.).—House of Lords decided today not to insist upon the retention of the death penalty for cowardice and desertion in the British Army, abandoning their amendments to the army and air force annual bill which were sent from the Commons abolition of that punishment.

Yesterday the Commons insisted upon the end of the death penalty.

INSPECT MOTORS AT DEPOT HERE

Establishment of Depot In Belleville Likely Very Soon

The establishment of an inspection depot under the Department of Highway may be located in this city according to Traffic Officer W. O. Flak. At this depot a brake testing machine will be located and a place where motorists might have their lights testing. Mr. Flak states that from observations today that many cars were driving on the highways with glaring lights and also cars that did not carry the required number of rear clear lights. Each will be made of these two breaches before summons are caused from glaring lights than any other consistency of the law. The driver lights should be adjusted. Another cause is the one-eyed monster that goes tearing along the highway as if the driver was the only person on the road. It is almost impossible for a car coming in the opposite direction to tell what kind of a car is approaching and sometimes an accident occurs. Summonses will be issued to those driving with glaring lights and without the equired number.

MOTORCAR DAMAGED ON COLEMAN ST.

An accident occurred on Coleman Street early in which two cars were more or less damaged. John Rippard chauffeur for Dr. J. J. Robertson was driving north on Coleman Street near the Bridge when he passed Herring 177 1-2 Bain Ave., Toronto, was coming out of a garage on to the street. The car driven by Rippard struck the latter car damaging its front considerably and turning it north against a post. Rippard's car went across the road, over the curb and against a tree with only a broken spring and a bent fender. Barry Bain was not to the scene but there is a likihood of a settlement being made between the parties.

CREDITORS TURN DOWN PROPOSAL

Demand Trustee Continue Bankruptcy Proceedings

Peterboro, April 17.—Unconditional opposition to the offer of the bankrupt firm of Hobbs, Forlong and Company made to the creditors last week as a compromise, was voiced at a large meeting of the creditors in Peterboro this morning held here last night.

The meeting went on record as unanimously favoring having the affairs of the company cleared up through the regular channels of bankruptcy, providing delivery of stocks to creditors is impossible.

The meeting asked why N. L. Martin, the trustee, had not divulged full particulars of the seven offers which he has received by firms to purchase the assets of the estate.

The meeting passed resolutions that the offer submitted by the company regarding refinancing of the company be refused unconditionally and that the assets be distributed without distribution of all assets be made and that the trustee proceed under the bankruptcy act.

It was charged that the offer made by the firm was just an attempt to secure discharge from bankruptcy so that further orders would not initially might be escaped. Hon. C. N. Gordon, K.C., presided at the meeting.

"I nearly always felt listless and fagged out. Indigestion was chronic with me, my nerves were upset and I seldom ever enjoyed sound, restful sleep. It's hard to realize how 4 bottles of Sargon have built me up. I enjoy hearty meals without a trace of indigestion, am gaining weight and sleep fine. NEGRO VOODOOIST SHOT IN SHANTY

Kansas City, Mo., April 17.—A self styled negro mystic, was shot to death here among his voodoo charms, after a two-hour battle with policemen, Mrs. Rohma Morris Cole was injured by a shotgun charge from the negro's shanty on the banks of the Blue River.

The negro, Tom Sims, recently discharged by a steel company for preaching voodooism to other negro employees, was reported by neighbors to have been shooting at ghosts the last few nights. He barricaded himself in his hovel and shot through windows at passers-by.

Sims was ordered by policemen to surrender. "No!" he shouted, levelling his shotgun. Patrolman E. C. Britton dodged escaping the charge.

Police reinforcements arrived, delaying behind fences and buildings. Both sides kept up a desultory fire as the officers planned to burn the house by tossing oil-soaked rags at it. Finally an officer hurled a large stone forcing the door open.

Sims was seen crawling along the floor apparently blinded by tear gas and wounded. Detective R. K. Cole fired the fatal shot from a riot gun.

WASHED OUT

REID CASE LAID OVER FOR WEEK

Will Probably Take One Day More Before It Is Concluded

After considerable detail evidence was submitted by Mr. and Mrs. Cook manager and book-keeper for the Shoulds Bread Company, in the case of Albert Reid charged with theft of some $500.00 from that firm, His Honor Judge Deroche adjourned the hearing until one week from today, when the case was heard in County Court yesterday afternoon. Mr. Cook was subjected to a stiff cross examination by E. J. Butler K.C., who had charge of the defense and after his conclusion B. C. Donnan conducting the prosecution rested his case and Mr. Butler put the accused in the box.

Albert Reid gave evidence to the effect that nearly every day he was short in his bread and this would account for the difference in the amount of cash that he should have turned in, when discharged from the firm. The bread was handled improperly at Belleville and sometimes was tainted with a gasoline smell and he did not believe he was given credit for it. Mr. Cook distinctly stated in his evidence that when Reid was discharged from the firm that he was given credit for every thing he asked for and still there was a shortage. Mr. Donnan in cross-examination to disprove his statement of shortage on every day took at random some of dates that were delivered bread and taking the amount received by Reid checked that with the amount entered in the cash book and in nearly every case he was a couple of loaves over. It will take some time to finish the case and as His Honor Judge Deroche was busy hearing he adjourned until one week from today.

A very unusual story bearing as its title "Condemned" featuring Ronald Coleman and beautious Ann Harding opened yesterday at the Belleville Theatre for a three day run and was given instant approval by the large audiences that viewed it yesterday. Ronald Coleman is fortunate indeed in appearing in a talking role than he was on the silent screen which is saying rather a great deal. It is a fine talking venture and his voice records beautifully. Ann Harding, formerly leading star of "Tarnish" and "The Trial of Mary Dugan" is also "Right Behind" gives a splendid portrayal of Madame Vidal, the arrested wife of the warden of Devil's Island. Ronald Coleman is the warden's helper, a convict

GIFTED STUDENT ORATORS VIE IN SCHOOL FINALS

Miss Lorine Adams to Represent Collegiate—Four Took Part

Miss Lorine Adams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Adams, Albert street, will represent the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School at the district oratorical contests to be held within a few weeks. Miss Adams was the choice of the judges at the local contest held in the auditorium of the Collegiate last night. The greatest attention observed a much larger crowd but it was a highly appreciative one, which turned out to witness the trials. Four students took part in the competition, Ross Weese, Miss Lorine Adams, Miss Katherine Smith, and Kenneth Grills.

The judges, Mrs. J. A. McFee, Miss Rahina Templeton, Mr. George Stewart and Mr. J. O. Hertly found difficulty in choosing a winner, but after due deliberation, Miss Adams was general delivery, enunciation, position, etc., was declared slightly superior. Miss Katherine Smith another gifted young speaker, was awarded second prize. Mr. Hertly in announcing the winner, noted the absence of oratory and the new type of common sense public speaking which is featured now.

The speakers were each judged on the following points, preparation, subpoints, arrangements, 10, diction, 10, originality, 10, personality, 10, enunciation 10, voice 5, position 10, personality 10.

The evening was featured by a number of musical renditions, while the young students of the school put on a tumbling act. A semi-chorus of Collegiate girls sang a three-part chorus "Shaheen." Their effort was perfect in intonation and balance, and was very much appreciated by the audience. They were under the direction of Ross Hunter, Musical Director for the Collegiate.

"Making Highways Safer"

Ross Weese chose for his subject, "Making Our Highways Safer". Mr. Weese advanced a number of well-timed suggestion to prevent accidents in the course of his remarks. "The accident rate is increasing each year," he asserted, "and in 1938, twenty hundred were killed in motor accidents while six thousand accidental casualties in which one or more were maimed. We need more, safer, smoother and wider roads as lack of room is a great bulk, does not correspond with the number of new cars that are produced each year. There is a great inclination to speed when a driver reaches the open road. Reckless driving placed along the highways would help to a great extent in saving the dangerous night driving," observed the speaker. A two foot shoulder of brick along the road instead of the dirt, and barricades at important points, in order to eliminate joy riders and drunken drivers, were two other worthy suggestions, he gave. "I would abolish the speed laws and instead, post on the road side, noting the speed to be made at curves and level wide stretches," Mr. Weese stated.

He said he was under the impression that harder tests should be provided for new drivers and also that regulations governing the speed of cars should be included when the car is built. In conclusion Mr. Weese claimed that inspections should be made of all cars at intervals while a mechanic's license should be formed, and in order to qualify, a man should pass certain set examinations.

Ken. Grills Chose Subject

Ken. Grills chose as his topic, "Canada". "The commercial prospects are promising, we have a well established independent labor class and I firmly believe the country is destined to a great future," he said in opening.

Great Transportation System

Mr. Grills discussed the Canadian Wheat Pool, the Canadian National Railways and the great Hydro Electric Power system. "We have the greatest transportation system in the world," declared the speaker, "since the Canadian Pacific owns more miles per capita than any other road." He depicted the fact that some systems were privately owned and opined that they should be under the direct jurisdiction of the Federal or Provincial Government. He pointed to the completion of the great Hudson's Bay Rail road under the direction of Hon. Chas. Dunning, as a step forward in progress. He touched briefly on the need of a great connecting highway system between Eastern and Western Canada, remarked on Canada's great water facilities, and stated that, although aviation is still in its infancy, it has made tremendous strides.

He turned to the Peace River District which he characterized as the "Garden of Canada", the untold mineral wealth and the vast forest reserves describing the field for development, in each industry. Mr. Grills spoke of the strides made in the field of literature and art, and cited the names of Miss Carman and Archibald Lampman as two outstanding Canadians. In concluding his speech Mr. Grills painted a rosy future for Canada as a land of happy progressive people.

Miss Lorine Adams who chose "Canada" as the subject for her address, "We must influence the right type of people in come to our shores where over three hundred million acres of agricultural land must be tilled. Climatic conditions, an abundant water supply, gigantic forests, and valuable mineral deposits made Canada a great manufacturing country", observed Miss Adams. "We have a great transcontinental railway system, in fact one of the greatest in world which links the east coast with the west".

She pointed to the educational facilities offered in Canada. There are sixty-six creeds and there are facilities for religious, as well as academic education. Miss Adams discussed the different types of foreigners that come to Canada, remarking on their many and varied accomplishments. "We must encourage these strangers to our shores and make their life here a happy and pleasant one," she said.

Miss Kathrine Smith, the fourth contestant, spoke on the value of the modern educational system. "Education teaches peace as War is a nurtury fear, and War is inspired by ignorance," Miss Smith quoted. "We must encourage men like Louis Pasteur and Dr. Collip, the famous scientist, who helped to invest insulin and who was educated right in this school. "Over half the world cannot read or write," Miss Smith pointed out Miss Smith, "so India and China alone there are half a billion illiterates."

Impromptu Speeches

The speaker observed that everyone has the same opportunity to secure an education, pointing to Lincoln, who went from the log cabin to the White House. The speaker stated that in education lay the solution to crime prevention.

Each contestant was given five minutes to speak upon an impromptu subject which were drawn as follows:—

Ross Weese, "Recent School Exhibition".

Kenneth Grills, "Some Safety Holes that People Should Observe".

Lorine Adams, "Morning Assembly".

Katherine Smith, "The value of the Elective System".

Mr. Chas. Greenleaf entertained during the judges' absence with a number of humorous monologues which were enjoyed with the audience. Mrs. J. A. McFee made the presentations to Miss Adams and Miss Smith while George Tilley, Superintendent of the school, made the presentation to complete the evening. Miss Dorothy Berry, Vice-President of the Literary Society very capably presided as chairman.

Teacher Obtains Many New Ideas

Miss N. Emily Todd Brings New Ideas After Attending National Conference

Toronto, Ont., April 17—With all sorts of new ideas for developing the teaching of music in Toronto schools, Miss N. Emily Todd, music supervisor, has returned from the Music Supervisors' National Conference in Chicago. She reports that the Chicago schools are now functioning smoothly, all the teachers having received their arrears of salary from the Board of Education.

After seeing a demonstration of piano class teaching with eight pupils playing simultaneously on eight grand pianos, Miss Todd is hoping to try out the same system in the classes which are being conducted after school hours here by the Canadian Academy for the advancement of Music. Dealers lent 135 pianos to the Chicago schools for these classes this year.

Miss Todd states that music is considered a regular subject in the United States High schools and that it is accepted for university entrance requirements. "That's the way it should be here," commented Miss Todd. As boys' voices change, they are moved from soprano to alto, and then to "boy tenor," finally being put into either the tenor or bass groups. Miss Todd agrees that this system is better than the English one of not allowing a boy to sing while his voice is changing.

HISTORY OF GLASS TOLD BY PHYSICIAN

Montreal, April 17.—Although the Chinese Emperor is said to have used convex lenses to view the stars more than 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, no record of their having been known to antiquity exists, and at present they are assumed to date from the 13th century when they came into use simultaneously in the Orient and in Europe, Dr. S. H. McKee told the botany club at their weekly luncheon. He reviewed briefly the history of glass, then of lenses, explaining that not until the 16th century were any other than convex lenses made.

The city of Sidon, in Phoenicia, was founded on a glass industry, the speaker said. Its folk were pleased with the appearance of the pretty substance they had discovered by accident, and they used it for trading with savages like the British. According to Pliny, they had learned the art of working glass from the Chinese.

When convex lenses came into use in the Orient they were of much the same structure as those used today. The lenses were mounted in tortoise shell frames that fastened behind the ears. In Europe the first to leave any record of his knowledge of glasses was Roger Bacon, who seems to have understood refraction. Glasses came into some general use, he records, as a busy reading and writing, as a corrective measure for defective eyesight which occurs often in the ages of 40 and 50 years. The Church viewed their use with disapproval, but they became popular in spite of censorship.

Japan is now third on the list of colour manufacturing countries. Great Britain and America is second and China fourth.

UNITED STATES OF EUROPE ENVISAGED

Montreal, April 17. — Kiwanians glimpsed Posen Fair—the middle-European Wembley—a great military review conducted by Pilsudski, and fragrant hayfields in Poland and Czechoslovakia, through the medium of a graphic informative lecture by Dr. William Caldwell, of McGill University and Royal Bank of Canada Experiences in Europe."

The lecturer began with a eulogy of President Masaryk, of Czechoslovakia, whose achievements in uniting his country and advancing it to a prominent position in the comity of nations were an especial subject of comment recently on his eighteith birthday anniversary. "If there were to be formed a United States of Europe," Dr. Caldwell said, "no better man than Masaryk could be selected as its president."

SAFE RESISTS BURGLARS

Guelph, April 17—Prying open a door, burglars entered John Reinhart's garage, but failed in an attempt to smash open a large safe. The only loot obtained by the thieves was 40 or 50 cents in coppers taken from the cash register.

HAND OF CRIBBAGE

St. Catharines, April 17—It does not often happen in cribbage, that a twenty-nine hand is obtained, but Capt. Emerson, Fenian Raid veteran held one and it is the first reported in this section. He was dealt three five, jack of hearts, king of spades and eight of clubs. He discarded the king and eight, and the fourth five was turned up—a heart.

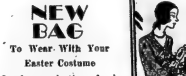
THANKS EXTENDED FOR RELIEF FUND

Montreal, April 17.—T. B. Macaulay chairman of the Newfoundland Relief Fund Citizens' Committee, of Montreal, announces the receipt of a letter of gratitude from R. P. Norwood, chairman of the South Coast Liaison Fund Committee, St. John's, Newfoundland, for the remittance of $20,000, sent to the relief of sufferers of the recent tidal wave disaster there.

In the letter, Mr. Norwood mentions the fact that the fund now amounts to approximately $30,000 of which some $20,000 was raised in Newfoundland and the balance from friends in other lands.

The committee, he states, is now actively employed administering the funds and restoring the decimated property on the south coast and replacing the boats and fishing equipment that were destroyed by permits the fishermen to resume their avocations.

Arrests Muskrat on Main Street



Lindsay, April 17—One of the 30,000 muskrats to be trapped in this district this season left its happy home on the bank of Scugog and romped thus arrested.

up Lindsay's Main street. There were few pedestrians, but Constable Reeves of the night force saw the rat, and went to corner in the doorway of the Royal Bank. He received a bad nip on the shin for his trouble, whereupon he drew his billy and rapped the muskie over the head. He then carried his prisoner away in safety. This is the second rat Constable Reeves has arrested.

TRENTON AND DISTRICT

EDUCATED TRAMP SOUGHT SHELTER

Transient Who Stopped at Police Station Speaks Five Languages

TRENTON, Ont., April 16.—(Special)—In the floating population which seeks shelter at Police Stations, havens maintained for philanthropic purposes, and other places, one often meets strange and interesting people, and the case of Stephanus O'onhinsen is one of the most interesting. Stephanus drifted into the Trenton Police Station the other night, and signed the register as above, giving his birthplace as Johannesburg, South Africa. He easily drifted into conversation with the officer in charge, probably due to the fact that he speaks five languages, English, Dutch, French, Italian and a South African dialect. He is well educated, and declared that he was "of a literary disposition", and was writing a book. He refused to tell where he had received his education, or how he came to be in the position of an ordinary "tramp" when he had such an education, but was quite willing to talk on any other subject.

Last night fourteen men sought shelter at the Police Station, bringing the total up to 768 for the year 1930.

Subdued Blaze on the Mountain

Trenton, April 17. (Special by Staff Reporter)—Citizens of this town witnessed a thrilling sight last night when a grass fire started on the side of the Trenton Mountain, which took several hours to put out. At times the blaze leaped high in the air, and on more than one occasion threatened property owned by the C.P.R. Much credit is due the good work of the Trenton Fire Department, the C.P.R. police and the Boy Scouts, the flames were put out before any damage to property was done. How the fire originated is not known.

Men Start Work on Water Tank

Will Be of Latest Design Built On a Concrete Base

Trenton, April 17 (Special by Staff Reporter)—Forty men started work yesterday morning on the new $5,000 gallon water tank which is being built here, just west of the C.P.R. Station. Mr. Anson Delong, of Trenton, is in charge of the construction, which will be rushed through to completion as soon as possible but it will be some time before it is finished as it is a big job. The tank, one of the latest models, will be built on a heavy cement base, and otherwise will be constructed of steel. It is being built for the engines on a new run from Toronto to Montreal, the train making only four stops in the whole run, it is understood. The water used will be pumped from the Trent River, some distance away.

Local Council of Women Met

Splendid Financial Report Is Presented by Mrs. McConville

Trenton, Ont., April 17 (Special by Staff Reporter)—The local council of Women of Trenton held a monthly meeting in the Town Hall on Tuesday evening which was largely attended, and much important business was transacted. Mrs. C. L. Fraser, president, was chairman, and reports were read from the various chairmen of the committees.

Mrs. T. McConville, treasurer, read the annual report of the council's finances, which showed everything to be in good shape and a surplus for the year ended. This included the buying of a new car for Nurse Haskin, of the V.O.N. at Trenton, a donation to the Children's Aid Society, another to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and another to the Save the Children Fund. One of the many suggestions brought forward which met with approval, and which will be tried if found feasible, was the showing of proper motion pictures for children. It was suggested that the council bring the approved pictures to the town, and show them at one of the theatres either in the morning, afternoon, or some special evening.

With the opening of the new bridge over the Madalena River at Girardot, Colombia, a direct rail route between Bogota and Dagua was opened.

FAMOUS PLAYERS MAKE OBJECTION

Quote Figures to Show Sound Pictures Not On Wane

Famous Players Canadian Corporation Limited, Toronto, take exception to a statement published in an advertisement in this newspaper April 12, which said:

"The road show stage attraction, "The New Moon", played in Montreal last week to $25,000 business, and the Talkie Theatres all took a flop—this is sad news, but true."?

The following figures are furnished by Famous Players showing the receipts of their four "talkie theatres" in Montreal during the week of "The New Moon":

Palace Theatre, playing "Vagabond King", $22,236.

Capitol Theatre, playing 'High School Princes", $18,200.

Loew's Theatre, playing vaudeville, $11,800.

Imperial Theatre, playing vaudeville and pictures $6,178.

Total, $58,504.

Considering the fact that this is the Lenten season the showing for the talkies was quite satisfactory.

Mr. C. M. Robson, Eastern Division Manager of Famous Players Canadian Corporation Limited, states that they have a building program for the coming year of five million dollars and every new theatre will be especially built to show sound pictures. This is no indication that talking pictures are on the wane".

PHYSICAL DISPLAY BY BLIND KIDDIES

Montreal, April 17.—Blind children handicapped by their lack of sight, have overcome many obstacles imposed by nature, but probably one of the most important achievements to their credit within nine last year is their triumph f nine calm of physical training, an insight into which was given at a class conducted by H. C. Patterson, physical director of the Central Young Men's Christian Association.

Unable to see their instructors, the boys followed the commands with the practiced ease of their more fortu te brothers who can see, and it was explained that, as a result of the carefully conceived plan for training these children, it was possible to lead them in certain exercises, the object of which is to help them increas their physical fitness. Similar results have been obtained with deaf and dumb children.

SENATORS BEAT RED SOX TAKING LEAD IN SERIES

Two Straights Taken From Boston on Home Diamond

RED ARE VICTORS

Boston, April 17.—The Washington Senators made it two straight from Boston Red Sox Wednesday, winning 5 to 4.

The Senators started off with West's homer in the first, and added two more in the second on a double, a walk and Sheep's homer and another in the third on a walk and two singles. Caster held the Senators safe after that while the Sox put across one in the second on a walk and a double and added another in the fourth on two singles and a sacrifice and two more in the fifth on an error and two doubles but were unable to pack the punch in the latter innings to put across the tying run.

Reds Victorious

Cincinnati, April 17.— Cincinnati Reds evened their opening series with the Pittsburg Pirates by winning their second game Wednesday 1 to 1. The latter innings were played in a drizzle.

Pete Donohue pitched for the Reds and kept his hits well scattered. He received fine support, particularly from Critz. Ford and Kelly, who made three double plays. Waldorf's home run in the seventh was the hit-ting feature of the game. The Reds bunched two pairs of their seven hits off Ervin Brame in the fourth and fifth for the other two runs.

THE HEATHEN WINS $10,000 HANDICAP

Havre de Grace Race Track, Md., April 17.—The Sagamore Stable's The Heathen defeated a high class field yesterday to win the $10,000 Colonial Handicap, first important stake of the Spring racing season. His stablemate, Italico, was second and the Glen Riddle Farm's Mr. Hare third. Battleship, coupled in the running with On Her Toes, was fourth. Eleven started in the six furlong sprint over a track softened by showers during the day, but in good condition.

The Heathen, skilfully piloted by Frank Coltiletti, took the lead soon after the start and made the pace all the way, winning by two lengths. Bejabak was on Balko and Earl Sande making third start of his comeback to the turf, rode On Her Toes. The race was run in fair time of 1.13 3-5.

CUBS SLAUGHTERED BY THE CARDINALS

St. Louis, Mo., April 17.—St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Chicago Cubs yesterday 13 to 3. the Red Birds smash ing the offerings of the Cub pitchers Wood, Lindsey and Shealy, for 2.2 hits while Sylvester Johnson held the visiting champions to 10 scattered safeties.

The victory evened the opening series with Chicago having won the initial game 9 to 8.

Bottomley, Fahe and Frisch led in the batting attack, Fisher, rookie Cardinal catcher of the Cards, getting three singles and a double in four times at bat. Tuesday he had four out of five.

Bottomley poked out his first homer of the season in the third, a long clout into the entire field pavilion that scored Frisch.

ACADIA COLLEGE DEFEATS WINDSOR

Wolfville, N.S., April 17.—Flashing a brilliant attack and playing straight defence, the Acadia College five, Maritime championship last night grabbed a six-point lead over Windsor, champions of Ontario and Quebec, in the first of their two-game series for the Eastern Canada basketball championship and the right to represent the Dominion finals, when they defeated the Upper Canadian quintet 24 to 18. The second game will be played here tomorrow night, with the total score of the two games deciding the winner.

A colorful crowd of nearly 800 persons, the largest ever to witness a basketball game in Nova Scotia, was in attendance and raised approval throughout the entire 40 minutes of play.

MISSED THE BOAT

New York, April 17.—Three Irish thoroughbreds being imported by P. White, which were due at Aqueduct this week, missed the boat at Queenstown, Frank Keans reports, and will not arrive until the latter part of next week. All are 3-year-olds and were bought in Ireland from the noted trainer, Mike Collins.

BOXING

Well fellows, don't pass up this set of boxing bouts on Monday at the Armouries. It sure is some card with some real good boys from Toronto and Belleville mixing it.

In the opening bout we find Morley meeting Ray Dekle for the Schools Boys' Cup. These boys fought a good draw last time.

Then Angel of Belleville, a game two-fisted fighter, meets Jones of Toronto at 115 lbs. Experience might win this bout.

Blake of Oshawa meets Crawford of Toronto at 112 lbs. This is a return battle as Crawford who has reach and height win in the Central Ontario Championships after a second round.

Now comes the fight for the 126 lb. class cup between Bardy of Deseronto and Parks of Belleville. These boys have met before and Parks proved only a close decision. Bardy however, may have improved some and will give a battle.

Freddy Parry of Belleville meets a good man in Delaney of Toronto at 135 lbs. Freddy claims that he is up against as Delaney K. O. Ripley of Oshawa in the Central Ontario Championships.

The next bout brings together those two rivals in Scotty Kline of Belleville and Bert Ripley of Oshawa for the 145 lb. class cup. Kline has had two to Ripley after hard battles and Ripley also lost his last two fights so this maker it pretty even.

In the middle weights class, 160 lbs., Bert Adams of Oshawa meets Arthurs of Toronto. Adams has been beaten all so far. He beat Crawford in the Central Championships and K. O. his man at Oshawa. But Arthurs will give him a real fight and don't be surprised at a K.O. either way.

Another Belleville favourite, Langman, meets a boxer in Johnson of Toronto, at 135 lbs. Langman however, should win over his man as he has put up some real fights and is a two-fisted fighter and should succeed and should be one of the feature bouts of the evening.

The Semi-Final Bout brings togeth-, er another pair of rivals in Scotty of Oshawa and Mickey MacGuire of Toronto. Sinden K. O. Wilson of Toronto in the Championship only lately to be K. O. by MacGuire, so he is out to call it even. Stocks out-pointed Ripley in his last fight and is in good shape for this bout.

Well fellows here is Freddy Leonard of Belleville up against the best heavyweight of Ontario, Skimmings of Toronto. Champion of Ontario, Skimmings K. O. Flypo, Brown and Culler in his last fights. But we are pulling for Freddy to outpoint him as he is a fast, clever boxer. This is the feature bout of the evening. Don't miss it.

tice that was given to the cheesemakers:

"The assembly requirements for developing a seed starter are the strict low temperature, and the practically efficient temperature control, sanitation, and cleanliness of all utensils used, and the uniformity and uniformity of technique from day to day. A good starter is a clean, wholesome acid bacteria and flavor-bacteria. We now know that a mere quantity of lactic acid bacteria is not all there is to a good starter. The culture must also contain flavor organisms. This is best done commercially by approved butter culture manufacturers and most of the commercial cultures available on the markets contain both acid and flavor organisms. Success in starter making requires the use of some of the very best quality indispensable. Without pasteurization, there is no success. The milk must not only be fresh and sweet and free from off flavors, but it must also be free from extraneous water. Diluted milk is unsuitable for this purpose, as it lacks the necessary food for bacteria, such as sugar, protein and minerals. Sufficient concentration to insure the desired fuuction of the acid bacteria.

Efficient temperature control is very important. The temperature must be right and it must be uniform. At too high temperatures, acid development predominates at the expense of flavor development and there is danger of overthickening and rapid degeneration of the starter. At too low a temperature the results are similar. Generally speaking, a temperature of approximately 70 degrees F. gives the most satisfactory results. A range of 68 deg. to 72 deg. allows sufficient latitude to take care of the usual seasonal variations. In winter when the likelihood of temperature fluctuations during incubation is downward, it is generally advisable to set the starter at 72 deg. F., or even a degree higher. In summer when the risk of temperature fluctuations is upward it may be best to set the starter at 68 deg. to 70 deg. F.

Absolute sterility of all equipment and tools, and scrupulous cleanliness in the technique of preparation are additional indispensable conditions. The thermometers, dippers, cans, jars etc., that are used in the handling and propagation of mother culture and the later when ripe for the vat must always be clean and sterile. To insure sterility of the small equipment and tools it is best to provide a box such as a galvanized iron or copper box with good, steam inlet, drain and vent. After thorough cleaning, the cans, tools and jars are placed in-the box, the box is closed and steam is turned on and left on for at least one-half hour and these tools and containers are left in the box until needed again.

Several jars of mother culture should be propagated and after inspection the best one should be used for inoculation of the milk for the b g starter. All milk used for the small culture and for the b g starter should be pasteurized at least 180 deg. F. for one-half hour to one hour and then cooled to the desired temperature before inoculation. When the mother culture has developed a taste, smooth soft coagulum so it breaks away clean from the side of the inclined jar, the jars should be set into ice water or crushed ice until the culture is needed. Then the big starter shows the desired coagulation it should be immediately cooled to 40 deg. F. or below and kept cool until needed, unless it can be used at once, in which case cooling is unnecessary.

Uniformity of technique from day to day and regularity of operation are a great help in accomplishing satisfactory results. This means particularly uniformity of air supply during the culture jar about two-thirds full) uniformity of amount of inoculating material (using about 1 per cent mother culture) and uniform temperature control. Under properly controlled conditions a good culture, properly handled, generally requires an incubation period of about 15 hours. That is, it takes approximately 15 hours from the time the starter is set until it has developed the desired coagulum and flavor.

Rawdon Family Are Honored By Their Friends

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Garrison Will Make Hope in Michigan

Rawdon, April 17 (By Mail)—A representative body of friends from all parts of Rawdon circuit gathered at Mount Pleasant Community Hall on Thursday evening, April 10th, to pay honour to two friends who have spent a life time of service among them, namely Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Garrison. This week they are moving to their new home in South Adams, Michigan, near the Lincoln Highway, and they will become worthy citizens of the state and aid-ps. Mrs. Mason very ably filled the chair and Miss Olive McConnell and Mrs. John Holmes presided at the piano throughout the evening. After singing "Old Black Joe, My Old Kentucky Home," Stanley Threads Among the Gold, and The Maple Leaf Forever," the pastor led in prayer. He then very fittingly told of the appreciation for the honoured guests, and of the deep regret at their departure from the community.

Misses Cleland Reid and Kenneth Sharpe gave several musical selections. Mrs. Edna Thrasher and Miss Francis McKeown rendered a piano duet and responded to an encore. Mrs. Thomas McKeown gave a reading "Keeping Up To Drive the Car." Miss Helen Sharpe sang "Dear Old Pal of Mine," Mrs. Percy MacMullen rendered "Darlew Must Not Ring Tonight." A humorous dialogue 1830 and 1930 was given by Mesdames T. McKeown and F. Smith. Mr. John Coggins sang "When You and I Were Young Maggie," and responded to an encore. Messrs. Kenneth and Clifford Holmes sang "Tumbledown Shack of Athlone" and "Typical Irish Ways." The honoured guests were then asked to take seats at the front and Mr. Ernest White read the following address and Mr. Frank Young presented them with a cheque. Mr. Garrison replied thanking the donors for the gift and also for the lovely address which he felt very unworthy at this time. He said although it would be their wish to remain here in Canada and be buried beath the Maple Leaf, still fate or destiny had willed otherwise and as they hoped to meet many true friends in their new home. He recited several poems to illustrate his feelings such as "Crow Old Along With me, The Best is Yet to be, the Last of Life for which we all are Made." He said with the gift they would perhaps purchase a floor lamp and some piece of furniture, and then he would write the pastor a long letter telling us ahead is.

As Mrs. Garrison has lived all her life on the farm, from which they are leaving, several in the audience were called upon to speak a few parting words. Namely Mr. C. A. Clancy and Mr. Herb Hoover of Wellman, Mr. Thomas McMullen and Mr. Alex Marvin of Bethel, Mr. John Johnson, Mr. Frank Spencer and Mr. Frank Williams, Mrs. Allen Bailey and Mrs. James Sharpe of Mount Pleasant. All wished them unsullied happiness in their new home and that God's richest blessing might rest upon them. In the evenings of life. They also stressed their good qualities and told of the sadness of parting. Mr. Garrison has given yeoman service in every part of church work and the younger ones especially the writer remembers the very enjoyable picnics that were put on under the capable management of Mr. Garrison as superintendent. After singing "Blest be the tie that Binds" the reception committee took charge and served a delicious lunch while a social time was spent discussing past, present and future.

Following is the address.

Stirling April 10, 1930

To Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Garrison,

Dear Friends:

"It is with profound regret, that Rawdon circuit has learned of your intended removal from our midst. A life long residence among us has been marked by an unselfish devotion of the best interests of the Community, you have served as faithful, great front of friends, therefore, feel too deeply for words the sorring of those ties of fellowship that have so closely united us in days gone by. Every worthy cause has found in you, earnest advocates of all that promotes the highest good of society. We desire to assure you that you are leaving behind you a record of loyalty, truth and right that will long perpetuate the memory of your comradeship with us. It has been your aim in the words of Helen Keller, to join the great company of those who make the barren places of life fruitful with kindness; to ever carry a vision of Heaven in your hearts, to find that external condidence are the accidents of life, its outer strappings and that the great enduring realities are home and service.

For many years Mr. Garrison you have most efficiently and cheerfully let us in sacred song, and we have deeply appreciated your splendid services to our church, as leader of the choir.

As a trustee of Mt. Pleasant church and as an elder of our session we have found your hearty co-operation and advice a great benefit to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the church your love. we have prized to, Mrs. Garrison your cheerful readiness to give your time and talents to advance the best social and christian activities of our Community life. As a token of our esteem for your high qualities of mind and hearts we ask you to accept this cheque and with it our prayers that a loving and all-wise Heavenly Father will richly bless your new home and continue to strengthen you with His unfailing presence, all the days of your pilgrimage.

The programme was entirely in charge of the children and every number given by them. The Chairman of the evening was Jean Nickle, President of the Mission Band, who cordially welcomed all the visitors in behalf of the Mission Band and Officers, then proceeded with the Devotional exercises. The opening hymn "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," was joined in by all. This was followed by sentence prayers by several of the small members, Douglas Hough, Harley Smith, Jean Whytock, and Mervyn Rutherford taking part, followed by the Lord's Prayer in concert.

A chorus by the Mission Band, "Birds are Singing," followed by a pleasing recitation by Josephine Belcher. A duet, "Daffodils," was well rendered by Helen Wellman and Madeline Bailey.

Missionary readings were given by Harley Smith and Jean Whytock, and a recitation "The Lost Mite Box," by Jean Nickle. Little Miss Sadie Turnbull delighted all by a vocal solo, very dainitly rendered. A recitation by Donald Rutherford, and a piano solo by Phyllis Stockdale were well given. An Easter song, "Easter Bells" was given by six little girls, and another chorus by the Mission Band completed a very fine programme, and the benediction was followed by a social half hour, much enjoyed by all. The leaders, Mrs. Rutherford, and Mrs. Bailey, and Miss es Fair and Garret were highly complimented on the great success of the meeting.

CHARGE C PPERS FORCE BIDDING

(Canadian Press)

Ottawa, April 6—Charges that "cappers" were operating to force bidding temporarily interrupted the public sale of art treasurers, furniture and bric-a-brac which started Monday at Earnscliffe, the one time home of Sir John A. Macdonald. The historic house is being cleared of valuable contents before being fitted up as the official residence of Sir William Clark, British High Commissioner to Canada. Fine old set of Worchester dishes was on the block when a mild storm of protest broke forth. A man in the centre of the large crowd of bargain hunters and curious ones started bidding at $20, another gentleman charged "single bids" were being made by persons who had no intention of buying. "We are not getting a square deal. Why don't you play the game fair," shouted a protesting one at the auctioneer. The latter voiced bitter objection at the insinuation and it was some time before the argument subsided and the sale continued.

OTTAWA, April 16.—Dominion bureau statistics reveal Canadians hold control of from 55 to 65 per cent of securities of all enterprises located on Canadian soil.

McGILL 'PLANE CLUB GREATLY IMPROVED

Montreal, Que., McGill students flew a total of nearly 90 hours during the session under the auspices of the McGill Light Airplane Club whose members held their annual meeting recently in the McGill—Physics Building where reports of the year's activities and election of officers was held.

The growing interest in aviation at McGill was indicated by the increase of 30 flying hours over the number, the year previous. Seven students flew solo during the year and six flew with an instructor. The treasurer's report showed a balance of more than $100.

The advisory board of Col. Wilfred Bovey, Dr. A. S. Eve, Prof. C. M McKergow, Capt. AW. S. Lighthall and Major Stuart Forbes was unanimously re-elected.

VALUE FAR ABOVE THE PRICE

THE FORD TOWN SEDAN

IN REVIEWING the many advantages of the Ford car, it is particularly interesting to note the relation between value and price.

The low first cost is a point to keep in mind at all times because it means a considerable saving to you in the purchase of the car.

Of even greater importance, however, is the reason for this low price and the manner in which it has been achieved without sacrifice of quality or performance.

Every purchaser shares the benefits of the Ford policy of large production at low cost — of selling at a small margin of profit — of constantly giving greater and greater value through the vast Canadian organization that has been built up for the making, selling and servicing of this car.

A new degree of excellence has been brought within reach of all the people through the development of new manufacturing machines and the discovery and working out of new manufacturing methods.

Evidence of this is found in the extremely close limits of measurement maintained in the manufacture of vital parts. Some of these are held true to within a maximum variation of three ten-thousandths of an inch, reducing friction and wear and resulting in greater reliability and longer life.

As the quality of workmanship has been increased through the accuracy of the machine, so has the quality of materials been improved. The savings resulting from new manufacturing economies have been put right back into the car. Through special Ford methods, materials once thought too expensive for a low-price car have been made available for use in the Ford.

NOTE THESE LOW PRICES

Roadster . .	$510	Phaeton . .	$550
Coupe . .	$620	Tudor Sedan	$620
Sport Coupe	$655	De Luxe Coupe	$670
Three-window Fordor Sedan . . .			$775
Convertible Cabriolet			$790
Town Sedan			$835

All prices f. o. b. East Windsor, Ontario. Bumpers, spare tire and taxes extra. Easy time payments can be arranged through your Ford dealer.

Today, more than ever, it is an outstanding example of high quality at low cost. Were it made and sold in any other way, under any other business and profit policy, it would unquestionably cost you much more than the present price.

The use of shatter-proof glass for the windshield is a definite indication of the quality that has been built into the Ford car. So are the four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers. The five steel-spoke wheels. The silent, fully enclosed four-wheel brakes. The aluminum pistons. The chrome silicon alloy valves. The simplicity and efficiency of the lubrication, cooling, ignition and fuel systems. The large number of ball and roller bearings. The extensive use of fine steel forgings instead of castings or stampings. The many other mechanical features that count so much in reliability, economy and long life.

All of these are important considerations to every man or woman who is contemplating the purchase of a motor car. All are important reasons why the Ford delivers a value far above the price.

ALLEGE SHORTAGE TOTAL OF $543.24

Albert Reid, Bread Salesman On Trial Before County Judge

Albert Reid, formerly employed by the Shoaldis Bread Company of Trenton appeared before His Honor Judge Deroche in the County Court, charged with obtaining from that company some $500.00. B. C. Donnan, Crown Attorney, conducted the prosecution and E. J. Butler K.C., appeared for the defense. Owing to the method that will have to be employed to prove the alleged shortages in the accounts, the trial will take considerably longer than anticipated. The several books used by the bread company in the keeping their accounts with the several salesmen will have to be minutely inspected. Only the evidence of R. A. Cock the accountant for the company was given at the morning session.

Reports that were sent down by the Shoaldis Bread Company of the quantity of bread are accepted by the sales man and this sheet is filled in with the quantity sold and money received for the day. Mr. Cock produced in court all the daily reports, while Albert Reid was an employee of the company and identified all the writing on these reports as being that of Albert Reid. The Crown Attorney asked permission of the County Judge to introduce the ledger sheets of a bank account in the Royal Bank of this city and Mr. W. A. Parker, the manager produced them.

This was a special account, where all the drivers in Belleville deposited their takings from the different routes. Continuing the witness said each daily report sheet was scrutinized. In many cases, Reid marked that he was short in the quantity stated as sent "but in all cases," said Mr. Cook, "the company accepted the driver's statement."

"What record would be actually kept of the daily sales by the salesman?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"On the daily sales report."

"Did he show amount collected?"

"Yes."

"How should it be distributed?"

"Stores would be cash, and private homes credit and cash."

"Did he sell for credit?"

"Yes."

"Can you produce records?"

"Yes, all the December of 1928 and January 1929."

"Does record book contain wholesale sales?"

"In some cases."

"What did account do with money collected?"

"Deposit it in Special account of Royal Bank."

"What record have you?"

"The deposit slips."

"How many times did he deposit?"

"Once a week."

"What was total amount received?" "$5,706.76."

"How much did he return?"

"Cash and tickets and allowances, $4,087.81."

"Were there any credits coming to Reid?"

"Yes."

"What would be the actual shortage?"

"$543.24."

"What was the amount sent to him in the week preceding May 20th 1929?"

"$178.47."

"What do his records show for that week?"

"$136.18. His shortage was $51.29."

"How do you account for shortages?"

"Very few times did he put wholesale sales in cash book and I knew that stores in Belleville were buying bread from Mr. Reid."

"Other weeks were taken at random through his employment and practically all of them showed a shortage of a greater or lesser amount, it was stated."

"Do you know Mrs. Holton, Station street of Belleville?"

"Yes."

"Did you have an interview with her after Mr. Reid was discharged?"

"Yes."

"On what account?"

"To collect a bill for bread."

"What did you find?"

"That Reid was claiming certain credits from the Bread Co., while Mrs. Holton was holding receipts from Reid."

New Brunswick Lady Tells Of Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. P. C. Belyea Suffered With Backache

Very Sure Back

Brown's Flats, N. B. April 14 (Special) Another tribute to the great work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing for the women of Canada comes from Mrs. Fred C. Belyea, a well known resident of this place. She writes:—"I used Dodd's Kidney Pills for my back which was so bad I could hardly get around the house or do my work. I got some Dodd's Kidney Pills and after the first few doses I noticed a difference. I kept on taking them and when I had taken two boxes, I was quite well once again."

Other sufferers of Backache tell of pains relieved and health restored through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They act directly on the kidneys. They strengthen the kidneys and put them in shape to strain the uric acid out of the blood. They do one thing only, but they do that one thing well.

"Don't mistreat your complexion by using the wrong soap ...use Palmolive" says

MIRBACH of Ottawa

"MANY women have the mistaken notion that they should use no soap on the face," says this leading beauty expert. "The trouble," I reply in all such cases, "is that you are using the wrong kind of soap. You should use Palmolive."

That is the opinion of the outstanding experts here as well as abroad. Indeed, more than 19,800 beauticians today recommend Palmolive Soap as the best home beauty treatment. They explain why.

Palmolive—vegetable oil soap

The vegetable oils in Palmolive Soap are soothing, gentle, yet penetrating. Olive oil soap lather has a unique cleansing action which leaves the skin refreshed and stimulated.

We may massage Palmolive lather into the skin it goes deep down into the pores, searching out hidden impurities, freeing the pores of accumulations which otherwise develop into blackheads, pimples, blemishes. For the bath, too, it provides a cleanser unequaled in efficiency and delicacy.

Here is the way to use it

Massage a creamy lather of Palmolive into the skin with your hands. Work it gently into the pores for about two minutes.

Now rinse off the soap and with it the dirt, oil secretions, powder and rouge that otherwise clog the pores and make for an irritated, muddy-looking skin.

A final rinse with ice water is refreshing in the morning. It serves to close the pores, guarding them against the abuses of daily life.

Annual Trek of Fur Seal Begins

Victoria, B. C., April 16—The annual trek of the fur seal has commenced and within a few days the Canadian Government ships will take up their position off Cape Flattery to escort the herds to their summer home in the Pribilof Islands. H. M. C. S. Vancouver which is expected back to Esquimalt from a cruise to the West Indies shortly, and the H. M. C. S. Armentieres will escort the valuable fur-bearing seals while they are passing through Canadian waters.

It is estimated there are nearly a million seals in the herds now coming up the Washington coast. During their migration the seals usually go in pairs and during heavy weather remain under water for a period of seven hours. When the weather moderates they come to the surface and rest on the wallowing waves.

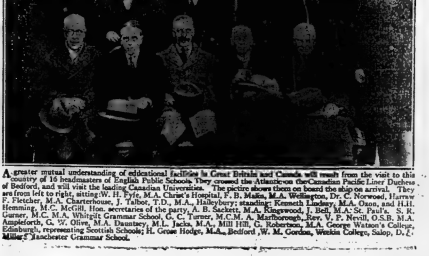
The herds will reach the Pribilof Islands late in May and remain there until the fall when they commence their journey into warmer waters again, striking the North American coast in the vicinity of San Diego, southern California.

En route to the Pribilof Islands, Indians are permitted to hunt the seal with canoes and only the primitive spear or harpoon can be used in the kill. Last year the natives killed about 2,000 seals.

Douglas' Egyptian Liniment is without a rival. Stops bleeding instantly. Cauterizes wounds and prevents blood poisoning.

New Guinea Still Has Head-Hunters

Sydney, N. S. W. April 16—Intertribal warfare and head-hunting are still practiced on an extensive scale in New Guinea, according to E. W. P. Chinnery, government anthropologist of the mandated territory, who recently arrived here on his way to the United States.



"The task of subduing the warlike tribes and making them good citizens is a tremendous task," said Mr. Chinnery. "Some of the old people are beyond reach, but we are doing our best to educate the young and we are gradually succeeding. We are trying to make the natives feel that the government is their protector rather than their enemy.

"Under the mandate, the moral and material welfare of the natives are paramount considerations," said Mr. Chinnery. "Thus we have a very thorough knowledge of the natives and an intensive form of native administration. It has been found that a study of scientific anthropology is of the greatest value to the district officers. It enables them to understand native life as they never could by merely observing and gaining experience in the ordinary way."

The territory has a population of about 500,000 including many tribes still in an entirely savage state.

The Cairo-Heliovan Railway in Egypt is to be electrified.

BACKWARD SPRING

With the mercury dipping below freezing point several points every night, the weather has shown of late a retarding of the progress to spring.

There was every expectation of an early spring but like a good many other expectations these have proved wrong.

All hopes now fasten on the week which is to come as likely to bring a change.

LAND OF MAKE-BELIEVE

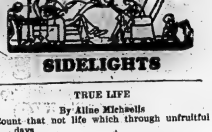
Discussing the plea of an Englishman for a National Theatre who based part of the appeal on the alleged bad effect of U.S. motion pictures on poor people in England, the New York Times says it does not see how the endowed theatre can keep the Hollywood's "luxurious profligacy" from the screens of England and treats of the suggestion that the wealth, ease, beauty, fashion and exaggerated romance of American movies and talkies "foster a smouldering envy in the minds of the poor."

In answer to this latter charge, The Times gives a very interesting reply. It treats of the difference between picture stories and plots and real life. If there is the slightest trace of truth in the charge in anyone's mind that persons ought to read The Times' view carefully so as to get the standpoint:

"One may love the theatre, believe in endowed companies and greatly dislike the movies without subscribing to such a theory. Perhaps there has been a motion picture so realistic in its effect that some of the spectators thought of the characters as real people. Most of them are not like that. Not only the flatness and the black-and-whiteness of the scene, but the very quality of the story usually puts a movie quite outside the humdrum workaday world into a realm of fantasy. People who go often to the picture palaces, whether they are rich or poor, accept the entertainment in the mood of children listening to a fairy tale. They know that it is not true, and even though like children they may wish ardently that things did happen so, they do not cherish the wish after the story is ended. There is an established convention for talkie audiences, just as there is for detective story readers or for musical comedy patrons. To be entertained is the object of all of them, and the first accepts its special kind of unreality as easily as the second puzzles over the murder and the third rejoices with a Cinderella heroine.

"Who is so blind to the glitter of such dazzling unrealities as to envy them? Surely not the hard-headed, hard-working poor. That a substantial comfort to take home and keep. The producers of the movies may be ignorant of many things, but they know this, and they keep their output all alike in glamour. Perhaps that is why the many movies of backstage life have been so successful. To the usual luxury of grand houses, fine clothes and expensive motor cars they can add an extra dash of behind-the-scenes romance, which, despite its actual dullness, holds a special fascination for most people who keep house or work in shops and offices and factories. That sort of unattainable, two-dimensional luxury is no more to be envied or desired than the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow."

LEARNING TO LIVE



The coming of the English school headmasters to Canada prompts a eulogy on the school in the community life, from The Ottawa Citizen, which says:-

"It is well to be reminded occoionally, however, that civilized man is just beginning to learn how to live. He has learnt how to work, so successfully that in the last century the problem of production has been solved.

"It is no longer any problem to produce goods in such an abundance that everyone could be supplied. Popular education has contributed much toward the solution of this problem. The schools have turned out big battalions of mechanical operators. The technical colleges have produced highly trained industrial workers. Scientific research has conquered land, sea and air and harnessed the forces of nature: the need for human labor has been largely eliminated.

"But in the last century of material progress there has been no corresponding progress in the spiritual life of powerful nations. Because of this hiatus between power and intelligence, the great majority of people appear to live no more happily than they did in primitive times before electricity, steam, and the mechanical forces generally had been enlisted to emancipate the human race from long hours of labor.

"It is vital to the survival of this civilization that education should be designed more to teach how to live. Dr. Cyril Norwood, headmaster of Harrow School., speaking in Ottawa, made the arresting statement that religion cannot be divorced from education. Opponents may reply that religion has itself lost the spiritual vision. The churches have yielded place to the banks; where the treasure is, there will the heart be also. However difficult it may seem to be bring popular education again into accord with the spirit of primitive Christianity, there is no other way to bridge the gap between material progress and intelligent living."

SIDELIGHTS

TRUE LIFE

By Aline Michaels

Count that not life which through unfruitful days
Flows like a sluggish river, dull and dark
Untouched by any gleam of sunlight's rays,
Unvisited by any outbound bark.
Those currents move so slowly to the deep
They bring no breath of waters fresh and free;
But seem almost unwillingly to creep
Upon their journey to the waiting sea.

Count only those swift freshets than can hear
The spirit of an eager, mounting tide
Past April meadows, through sweet, rain-washed air,
Out to the singing ocean, deep and wide.
True life's abundance floods the happy breast
As rushing waters lift their sparkling crest.

Robert Douglas, founder and former president of the Cerro Corporation which hit the crest of the wave in United States big business, bequeathed a million-dollar fund for public, charitable, and educational work in the village of Scone which has a population of two thousand people. Trustees of the fund will leave for Scotland in May to consult with municipal officials of Scone how best to use the bequest in the interests of the population.

WILL ROGERS, cowboy philosopher and humorist, just don't cotton to women folks in the U. S. Senate, following the recent Chicago Republican primaries where Mrs. McCormick won the Senatorial nomination. Says he:

"When the papers get through raving about Mrs. McCormick being elected on "Don't enter the World Court," maybe somebody will accidentally give her election the real credit. It was the woman herself. She could have won on "Don't enter the world's series" just as easy. But how we will pay for her election? Every women that can fill out an application blank will start running for something. It will take ten years to prove to women that it takes more than a kimono and an ambition to make a statesman. CHEERFUL GIVER

Tommy's father had given him a ten cent piece and a quarter of a dollar, telling him he might put one or the other on the contribution plate.

"Which did you yive, Tommy?" his father asked when the boy came home from church.

"Well dad, I thought at first I ought to put in the quarter," said the lad, "but then just in time I remembered. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and I knew I could give the ten-cent piece a good deal more cheertully, so I put that in."

YOU NEVER CAN TELL

A strapping woman boarded a trolley car in Rye, N.Y., settled into a seat and paid five fare. The car had not travelled more than five blocks when she rang up a cash fare. Whereupon the conductor strode up to her.

"Madam," he demanded, "do you know that I must turn in every fare rung up on that register."

"Certainly!" the woman replied, throwing open her coat and showing a badge. "Meet the new inspector."—Everybody's Magazine.

A sailor who suffered from a bad impediment in his speech rushed up to the captain one morning, vainly endeavoring to say something. Now, the captain knew that although this man suffered badly he was a good singer. So, he said, "Sing it, my man." And the sailor sang:

"Should old acquaintance be forgot
And never brought to mind,
The blooming cook fell overboard,
He's now ten miles behind."

Two friends met in mid-air.

"Fancy meeting you here!" cried one. "I am falling from my aeroplane."

"That so?" replied the other. "I am rising from my gas stove."—Miss C. Scotford, Group 81, Folly, Peel Estate.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

CHAPTER XI

"Now the point is, Mary Kate said with a judge, "exactly what can we pay?"

"Rent?" Cass Keating asked, with a deepening glance at her, walking along a sunshiny spring street beside him.

"Rent."

"Is that a new hat?"

"This? Well, I'll tell you. A girl at the office named Louise Sherlly, gave it to me for Tess. And I gave Tess fifty cents for it."

"It's wonderful." Cass bestowed another look upon his promised wife, a look that broke the first commandment.

It was Sunday, a warm March Sunday that smelled of earth and flowers. White clouds were moving above a blue blue sky; the world looked washed and clean, church bells, heard the sunny city with a lingering solemn clamor. Gala churchgoers were moving briskly along, but Cass and Mary Kate had already performed their Sunday duty, and were free.

The girl had indeed been out in the cool twilight of seven o'clock, catching the sunrise over the towers and ship spars of lower San Francisco. She had "gotten" even a delicious breakfast, alone with Ma and Pat, and had seen more sunshine slanting into the shabby kitchen, striking glints from the brass sink faucets and the nickel alarm clock. She had roused Tess and Regina and Tom and Mart, had wash ed the bright hair, and read the Sunday paper and worked out the crossword puzzle while it dried; she had helped her mother straighten the kitchen, after the children's breakfast, and had heard once more the story of the day Aunt Nellie caught fire just before the Rowe twins were born, which recollection inevitably led Mrs. O'Hara into a risertation on Uncle Jim Rowe who was irresistibly high-spirited, and who had been known in his youth as "the life of the wake." This naturally evoked memories of the Dugans, the Creels and the Spite Wall.

Tess and Regina had to be torn from the backwardness of the Spite Wall to run off to "nine". All the children would linger by the door for quarter hours together, wiping the immaculate brass doorknob and scoured nine shent-mindedly while the mothers of the days and ways of generations long dead.

At twelve o'clock, on this particular Sunday morning, Mary Kate had come down the stairs a very picture of youth and beauty and smartness—and Cass, respectfull sitting on the end of a chair in the now spotless kitchen, some what timidly making talk with a surprisingly frosty hostess, had risen to meet his sweetheart with a rather doubtful smile.

"Could Mary Kate and I go for a little walk, Mrs. O'Hara?

To which Mary Kate's mother had amazed him by responding heartily:

"Oh, go along with you, the both of you! You'll bedding nothing now but giving us all the slip, I wouldn't wonder."

"Gee, she's kind. What's happened? the dazed Cass had lost no time in asking Mary Kate once they were alone.

"Oh, you know Ma!" Mary Kate had answered impatiently. "She was on tenterhooks yesterday, for fear it was all broken off between you and me. If you could have heard her you'd think I was the one that made all the trouble! She kept telling me what a fine fellow you were and how many a girl had lost her happiness just by fuss and loose with a man and all that. She had me almost crying."

"Well, and now won't she expect me to—to say anything—I mean are we engaged?" the bewildered Cass had pursued determinedly.

And now it was Mary Kate's turn to be a little sensitive.

"Oh yes, of course we are!" she had said carelessly.

"Well, but—we are engaged?"

"Why, we're househunting, anyway! Why must we fuss so much about everything?" But she had given a jump of general satisfaction in the spring day her companion, and the expedition that had afforded him little consolation.

"Let's hunt houses early Sunday until we find what we want?"

A faint cloud.

"Mr. Rounlzee may want to go back to Sacramento next week-end Cass."

"Since when?"

"He was talking about it yesterday. "You've been there, have you?"

"Oh, never!"

"Gee," Cass said, thinking, "I wish I could get away and go down with you."

"Mother'd love that," the girl observed with suddenly cold hands and a thumping heart.

"When do you go?"

"Thursday, I guess."

"Oh, well, I couldn't go then!"

To her great relief he seemed satisfied. It was natural enough thing. Hundreds of San Francisco's business men made the trip to the capital once or twice monthly. Mary Kate breathed normally once more. But it had been a bad moment.

The hour was one of rapturous excitement. In city's thinnish-ensmeared young couple that passed them, they saw themselves. Baby cradles and bedding little citizens, all white coats had a new meaning this morning. And especially were the heavily apartment houses, rising tiers of bright clean empty windows, stirred with shocks and quakes filled with new charm

Cass gave Mary Kate his hand to help her over precarious bridges of barrels and boards, and they peeped into the bright little new domiciles to get plastered or painted.

"Imagine, Cass, what a view!"

"Wait. Does this room belong to this apartment, or to the next one?"

They stepped through what would soon be walls shutting one man's home from another. Mary Kate was ecstatic over breakfast nooks, open fire-place casement windows.

"Here's where my apron would hang! This would be our room, this the sitting room, and you see we could have little flower pots all along her in a row."

The miracle of it smote them.

"Cass, isn't marriage wonderful?"

"I'll say it's wonderful!"

"I mean, think of you and me—all ways together. Mart and Tom and Mother coming to have dinner with us, but then going away, and leaving us together."

"I know."

"And then—oh, maybe having a place in San Mateo some day, Cass, I mean if everything goes right. And a car. Why, look at the people who have cars."

"We'll have a car!"

"I mean—in ten years we'll have so many memories," she said wistfully. "I'll try it as a 'wonderful!'" he said indignantly, again.

They looked at a terrible dark apartment, that wouldn't do at all. They looked at one seven-room one, ridiculously roomy and high-priced. The man who showed it to them mentioned the rent as eighteen hundred, and Cass made Mary Kate laugh by saying politely that he had not intended to buy the building.

Wandering, wandering, wandering happily along they got far from home; way up into Stanyon and Mc-Allister Street neighborhood near the park. Mary Kate loved the idea of living near the park.

In the park, the band was playing in still, joyful afternoon sunshine, and thousand of persons were ranged on the benches, under the plane trees, or lying on the green slopes of grass and hill, babies and newspapers scattered about them.

"Want to go into the Museum?"

"Oh, my feet!"

"Mine, too." Mary Kate sat down on the young green grass, and Cass threw himself down next to her, and they listened to the Post and Peasant together. The girl quite unconcernedly took off her tight little helmet of a hat, and ran her fingers through the blazing red-gold of her silky hair. Passersbys looked at her.

The music strained through the fragrant air unevenly, now fanned by an idle scrap of breeze, now fading away.

"I'm sunk," said Mary Kate sudden-ly.

"Me too." Cass rolled on an elbow. "This househunting is a job," he said. "I don't see ought to do, Cass. We ought to go home, and do the same. Then come back to supper. Ma has a chicken pie, I know, because she was making pies" pie crust this morning, and then we could go down to Lizette's or to a movie."

"Check!" Cass said, stirring reluctantly. "We skip lunch?"

"You had that hot dog."

I know. Well yes, that's all right," Cass assented. "Dinner at six, and it's after four now. Come on!"

In his easy manipulative way, he stopped a taxicab, and Mary Kate gave a groan of comfort as she sank into the seat.

"Well, anyway, we didn't quarrel," she enabled.

"Quarrel?"

"Don't you know you always quarrel when you get tired and hungry and dirty, and begin to discuss plans? Why bringing it on back from picnics, or the circus, my mother says we always used to get crying and scrapping, and one of us would cross the street, and walk along there, all alone and some body would jump on the dummy the minute we all got on—"

This aloud. But in her pathicky heart she was crying, "Shall I tell him? Shall I ask him whether it would be all right for me to do what Mr. Steynes wants me to?"

And in her heart she was answering "No, he'd go mad. He'd say Mart and Mother all wrong. They'd say he was just bluffing me, just trying to take advantage of me. It's all only—fun. I'm no baby, to be deceived, to be gotten into danger."

She remembered the penciled sum. She remembered Christopher Steynes saying, "Now listen, no more cracks about not wanting the money when I give it to you." And Mart and surprised "Why else do you think I'm doing it for?" and his friendly laugh.

CHAPTER XII

Life, last Sunday with a steady rain falling, and Cass Keating engaged to go over and spend the day with his aunt in Oakland...had been quiet, empty, dull, unsatisfying. But life today was thrilling and throbbing with possibilities and excitement.

Cass took after this happy, strangely emotional day, to get back to Sacramento. Mary Kate and Mart and Mother playfully shelling early peace. Tom, working over the radio, was concentrating in grave and content. His dark face was shorebed, his big, dirty hands clever and gentle with wires and connections. "G-r-r—"

"Strong? I'll fix it so it'll blow your head off!" Mart told the doctor's apartment?

"He's going to Germany with Doctor Von Steynes?" Mary Kate said over and over again, in her own soul, when she heard this bit of information.

And through the happy, safe home evening the determination strengthened. What did Christopher Steynes want her to do, after all, that such a fuss should be made about it? For her part, for twenty-four hours, save him from a situation that was not of his own creating, and return home safe and sound to tell the family of her daring and her adventure.

While she was laughing and talking at the family dinner table, and later, when she and Cass went to a movie, and sat with their hands hot, red, and their shoulders touching, half stupified by darkness and music, and the famous stars on the screen, she was conscious of the week end plan as only troublesome in the background of the joy unutterable, the background of her thoughts.

But the moment she faced it openly and honestly, it vanished. There was nothing to it. She was nearly twenty, and an informed and alert, as to the dangers of the world as any girl need be. If she chose for reasons that seemed good to her to take a chance, it was her own affair.

"The thing is, that we ought to carry this with a rush!" young Steynes told her, when they went into Dansin's beautiful shop, to buy clothes for the masquerade. "You'll have to call me Chris. Everyone calls me Chris."

"Chris," she repeated obediently, trying the sound of it.

She looked about interestedly at exquisite evening bags, fans and scarfs. Her errant asked, with an unprecedented air, for a special saleswoman, and they went into a private show-room.

"No use advertising the fact that we're minded here. But Mary Kate was too much a beauty not to be dressed in style.

"If it's an eighteen size it will fit me," she said to the middle-aged, haughty woman who presently arrived in evening frocks.

"But you'll want to try it on, Madam?"

No, Madam didn't want to try anything on. She was however persuaded to slip off her brown coat and put on the evening wrap.

It was a garment of white and gold brocade, patterned in little quilted squares. Cecile could afford to lose a few hundred if she would be such a fool. But the Keats brows drew together nervously. The doctor had been generous, but—how strange, that he and Cecile would have a child. Cecile who frankly disliked all children.....

Such a dreadful responsibility to bring a new—and perhaps unwilling—soul into the world. Underneath that cool self-possession, did Cecile feel something of the terror, the horror, he knew?

If she did, she hid it well. The secret of her condition had promptly flung her into hysterics. She was frantic with alarm and dislike. Her temper, always uncertain, became more than usually capricious. She made it an excuse for self-indulgence.

While he was thinking this, Ken had been idly driving through the morning sunlight along streets oddly deserted for Sunday. Now he found, with a leap of his heart, that he had unconsciously been obeying old habit. Half a block away, was Ardeth's hotel.

A smothered excitement stirred in his mind. The longing to see her again swept over him. Surely she would only roll past the last few months. Then again with her he was before his mother's illness. How many times he had driven down this street on a Sunday morning to find Ardeth waiting for him before the hotel.

Sitting here in the car with him, slender and lovely. Golden eyes meeting his own with such eager frankness. Ever bright hair—the lovousness of her.....

His heart leaped and for a moment he had the sensation of moving through a dream.

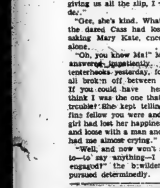
McGILL PRESENTED WITH OLD PAINTING

Montreal, April 17.—Stirring events in the making of Canadian history were recalled with the presentation of a painting to the McGord National Museum at McGill University, showing the burning of the Parliament Building, at Montreal, on the 20th of April, 1849. The painting was given by Dr. W. D. Lighthall, K.C. ...

The work, of which the name of the artist is unknown, shows the Parliament Building on fire, following a mob's attack on Governor General Elgin protesting the passing of an indemnity bill to pay the losers in the rebellion of 1837-38. The building stood on the site of the present Youville Square and is now acknowledged to have been burned by Loyalists in mistaken zeal against the Rebellion Losses Bill.



A statuette of the General Wolfe stands to be erected in Cromwich Park, London, is June has recently been given to the museum. The statuette, as well as the statue itself, is the work of a Canadian sculptor although a graduate of McGill. Dr. Tait Mackenzie, who is also the donor.

Other recent presentations were made by P. Cleveland Morgan, W. F. Pitfield, W. H. Lecky, Miss M. F. Hamsford, Miss L. M. Clements and Joseph Ward. The latter gave a facsimile of the Boston Chartie of March 12, 1770, and several notes of the State of Massachusetts Bay of about the same period.

The Poor Man's Friend—Put up in small bottles that are easily portable and sold for a very small sum, Dr. Thomas Eclectric Oil possesses power in concentrated form. Its cheapness and the varied uses to which it can be put make it the poor man's friend. No settler's stock is complete without it.

TO INSTAL NEW HEATING PLANT

Announcement has been made that Garn Dobbs, local plumber, has been awarded the contract to instal the new heating equipment in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. This system will be one of the most modern known to heating science, being of the vacuum steam type, zoned and noiseless, and it will be one of the most efficient and economical heating plants in the city when completed. Mr. Dobbs states that work will commence as soon as the material can be placed on the job.....

Why Simple Stomach Troubles so Often End on Operating Table

BECAUSE it could have been so easily avoided, so case is more pitiful, than that of Tanlac, a man or woman who is forced to undergo the surgeon's knife as the result of neglecting simple stomach ailments," said a New York physician recently.

You, for instance, may look on as acid stomach as nothing to fear. Yet in reality, it is a most alarming condition on account of its great tendency to develop stomach ulcers.

Face facts. If you suffer gas and bloating after meals, loss of appetite, constipation, headaches, if your breath is bad, your tongue coated, the best thing you can do is to go to the nearest drug store and get a bottle of Tanlac. Besides getting quick relief, your disordered stomachs which seemed utterly to have stopped working the way they should, have shown almost a miraculous return to normal and why through the remarkable stimulating effect of Tanlac. One woman, Mrs. May Opie, says: "Tanlac saved my life. I had stomach troubles for 15 years. Gas nearly killed me and I was in bed for weeks at a time. Doctors said it was gall stones and gall bladder. Spent lots of money but suffering increased and all hope was lost. Certainly a harder task for Tanlac could not be found yet it succeeded. Now in the best health in 10 years and can eat everything." Tanlac is not a "patent medicine"—it's a medicine so the sci accept a cheap substitute. Fully guaranteed to give satisfaction or money back. At all druggists.

The Feminine Viewpoint

The Beauty Box

More and more, the universal sisterhood is stepping along toward individual beauty—beauty of personality. The forward step was necessary, since good looks are almost a drug on the market. External perfections are admirable and women will chase after them as long as the world wags on. Now they're out after charm, something that does not depend upon outline of facial features, or—what the scales say when you step on them. The new ambition is aroused by the fact that, whereas in the past a person asked "Is she pretty?" he now inquires, "Is she interesting?"

The fingernail should not be cut; it should arch up slightly from the finger-base. Thin nails that bend easily are not robust or healthy. Ridges are those that are brittle. Both conditions can be bettered by annointments every night with lanolin. White spots on the nails are caused by injuries to the matrix, causing air bubbles to form in the new cells; therefore, no steel instruments should be used at the full base.

The old-time formula for the dry shampoo is orris root. A better one can be had by mixing orris with an equal amount of kaolin, which is Pulver's earth, cleansed and sterilized. Kaolin absorbs oil. Apply from a large salt shaker. Remove from the hair by brushing. For a quick thorough job, place absorbent cotton over the bristles of the brush.

Good appetite, proper food, regular hours for eating all have a beneficial effect upon the skin, which is a barometer, telling whether the digestive organs are enjoying fair weather or not. Digestive disturbances can produce pallor, they can make the skin sallow, they can coarsen the texture of the skin. Dark circles under the eyes are often indicative of a sluggish intestinal tract.

Bath salts are a pleasant luxury. Instead of buying by the bottle one can purchase bath torpedoes, each little package wrapped in gay paper and filled with the proper amount for one bath. They soften the water and impart a refreshing fragrance to the skin.

Because of binding their waist lines with corsets women become thoracic breathers, the movements of the chest being noticeable, the breast rising and falling with every respiration. Men breathe more naturally, from the lower part of the chest, the air trickling into the lower cells of the lungs, washing them out, acting favorably upon the blood and all the vital organs. Medical examiners say that women are now breathing more normally even those who were corset-bound in past years. So something has been accomplished.

Fashionably Speaking

DEAR READERS:

Have you made the sad discovery, as so many of us have, that lingerie that was made for shorter skirts simply won't do for the longer frocks? For that is the dismal fact. It is true more particularly about slips. If you have donned a closely fitting dress, with the longer lines emphasized by a flaring skirt, and taken a last look at yourself in the pier glass, scrutinizing the gown in the back to see that it hung perfectly, you have probably exclaimed, in dismay, "What is that ridge just above the skirt," only to learn, dear reader, that it was the slip made by the joy of the shadow proof hem of your short slip. You can't do anything, at the last minute, about it. You may be it down later, but then you encounter another difficulty. Few short-skirted slips are form-fitting. They are made "on the square," as it were, and they bulge out unpleasantly at the sides just when you want to acquire that sleek, "princess" effect. No, I am afraid that there is going for it but totally new bodies. You see, lingerie has gone princess in the same manner that model gowns have done

DON'T PAY THE PENALTY OF HARMFUL GUM IN GASOLENE

IMAGINE what a sticky, gummy, clinging substance does to the valves in your automobile. Think how your engine labors—how your valves must fight to get free—and the power you lose with gum-stuck valves.

That is exactly what happens when you buy inferior or carelessly refined gasolenes that contain excessive gum.

To be safe insist on Koolmotor gasolene—the original high test, anti-knock green gas. Harmful gum has been removed from this superior motor fuel by extra refining and extra care known as the Cities Service mini-gum process. The gum content has been reduced to a harmless minimum. This powerful, clean-burning gasolene keeps your valves clean and free moving. It guarantees full power and full speed. It allows your engine to do its best.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE WAGER

by

Richard Espey

Copyright, 1930, International Feature Service, Inc

Mary Pitch came back to work that Monday morning after a six weeks absence. On a slippery icy day in mid winter she had fallen and broken her leg, while alighting from a street car. She returned to her place behind the hosiery counter of Blair's Department store, glad enough to be up and around once more, but not a little worried as to where she might find the money to pay the doctor and hospital bills that had accrued during her illness.

"Hello Mary! Gosh I'm glad to see you back again. And say, Joe what's his name has been callin' up for you every week or so.... I told him you'd be back soon." That was Irene, a counter escort of Mary's.

Joe....Joe Blackburn. A nice fellow, but he didn't seem to click with Mary. Lazy, Foolish, Money? Not much, but he wasn't poor. Wanted to marry her.

"Yes, I suppose he'll call again...." Sure he would. Why Joe wanted to marry her.

And that, she reflected was a chance for a different life. Love? Mary was scornful. Be like Joe Blackburn and the bills would take care of themselves. For one year in the city had regretfully taught her that the future does not always take care of itself. The job at Blair's was her sole means of support, and you couldn't live high on Twenty one dollars a week.

There was one thing that held Mary back from saying the moment's run yes to Joe. That was, as is usual, another man. This one, Alan Sinclair, who didn't seem to give a darn about her. Perhaps it was because he was poor and knew where his money came from. Perhaps he was working hard. Perhaps.....

"Shalome, Miss Fitch!" The department head announced and Mary saw an expensively dressed woman approaching the counter.

"May I help you?" Mary asked courteously.

"I should like six pairs of tan and like'se of the blue.... The boys here have and I'm in a hurry. I have a train to make."

Mary exhibited the hosiery for the woman's quick approval. "Cash or charge?"

"Cash and I'll take them with me." Is that all?"

"Yes....." She gave her Mary a crump led bill and waited impatiently while the package girl tied up the parcel.

"Thank you, madam." Mary handed her the box and the woman hurried away.

Business was not brisk that morning and very soon after her first and only customer had departed Mary started to cross over to the other counter for a visit. As she stepped out into the aisle a crumpled piece of paper lying on the floor momentarily caught her eye. Doubtful at first, she picked it up and found that her suspicion had been verified.

It was not one, but two bills folded very closely together. And they were each of the one hundred dollar denomination. With unbelieving eyes Mary stared at the sum of money in her hand! Two hundred dollars! More money than she had ever had in her possession before. Enough to buy a store of dresses and hats. Enough to go to California and back. Enough...

Of course the woman customer had dropped it. Save for Mary, there had been no one down the aisle. A jingle came to Mary's ears. "Finders keepers, losers weepers.", Instinctively she started for the superintendent's office; place where all lost articles were turned in. And then as if struck with an undeniable fact, she stopped. The woman had left to catch a train. A train for....Perhaps for New York, then a steamer to Cherbourg, six thousand miles... there and back. If she returned, And Mary need'nt the money. With a guilty feeling she tucked it inside her dress and returned to the counter.

"Mary....." It was Irene again. "Joe's on the wire. Shall I tell him you're here?"

For an instant Mary was silent, thinking hard. Then she said coolly and calmly; "No. Tell him I don't work here anymore."

Mary entered the superintendent's office and was ushered into the inner sanctum. Mr. Wilder smilingly bade her to be seated.

"A customer lost this in the aisle this morning. I don't know who she was and I believe that she has left the city by now. I came up here right away."

It's quite all right Miss Pitch. This just settles a friendly wagger that I had with Sampson here. You see we're thinking of making you assistant buyer and this test was about the hardest we could think of. And it might have been," he added with a knowing smile. "The most expensive if I hadn't been so sure of my judgement."

"But the woman?" Mary asked dumbly. "Who was she?"

"The woman was my wife and she didn't lie to you. She's on the Century now for New York. But it was my money she dropped. Trust her for that! How about this new job we have in mind for you...."

"Gosh Mary!" Irene said, later on that morning. "You get more telephone calls than any three other people. Some bird on now Sinclair is the name...."

"Give me that phone!" Mary exclaimed.

Soldier's Tale Proves Undoing

James Harper Will Be Deported to Native Scott'sh Hills

Windsor, April 16.—James Cooper Harper, who for seven years has worn the uniform of the United States army, today in the Essex County Jail at Sandwich ponders the peculiarities of nature. Disclaimed by the United States and facing deportation to Canada, he wonders what sort of a welcome would await him in the native hills of Scotland. The rules of immigration authorities work in a mysterious way and therein lie all of Harper's troubles. He came to Canada from Scotland in 1923 and two weeks later crossed to Buffalo where he enlisted in the 16th United States Infantry. He served three years in Panama, returned, was honorably discharged and immediately re-enlisted.

On March 18 Harper was stationed at Fort Wayne awaiting transfer to service in China, and he darling he would like one more look at British soil. Wearing his uniform, he crossed to Windsor and passed two hours here. On his way back he fell foul the pitfall that had waited him for seven years. The United States immigration officers learned his story and sent him back to Canada. They told Canadian officers that he should be returned to Scotland.

A Canadian board of inquiry decided, in consideration of the oath he took when he enlisted the United States army, that Harper should be returned to the United States.

In the meantime the Scotch-American soldier is a prisoner, waiting for such justice as may be meted out to him.

Japanese Shipyards Suffer Depression

Tokio, April 16—Japanese shipyards have been taxed to the limit of their capacity during the past year seemed destined to experience another period of depression before the close of the present year as soon as the available contracts for large steamships are completed.

Last year the shipyards of Japan laid down sixty-nine ships representing a tonnage of 180,000. This is the largest new tonnage on record since the post-war years when shipbuilding enjoyed tremendous prosperity. For instance, in 1919 when the high-water mark was reached, 124 ships representing 610,000 tons, were launched.

Several of the larger yards have ocean liners in the stocks, but there are few contracts to take the place of these when they are launched. The present activity is due to the fact that money was easily raised and also to the government having ordered several steamship companies to renew certain ships in order that they might enjoy subsidies in the future.

These factors, however, are expected to be an important influence for only a few more months. The importation of foreign bottoms is meeting the shortage in ship tonnage to some extent and will contribute to the oversupply likely to occur before the end of the year.

PAINTING AND GARDENING

Montreal, April 17.—"Painting a picture and planting a garden are somewhat the same," said Dr. F. C. Harrison, professor of bacteriology, at McGill, in a lecture on garden planning given at the Mechanics' Institute. He compared the two, saying that the soil is as the canvas, and the flowers, plants, shrubs and trees as the many colored paints applied by the artist to his canvas.

MORE SAFETY C.N.S. STEAMERS

Cellular Double Bottom Feature of New Pacific Coast Vessels

Montreal, April 16.—Larger and faster than the vessels at present in service on the Pacific Coast, the three new vessels of the Canadian National Steamships, the Prince Henry, Prince David and Prince Robert, will shortly begin their service to the travelling public of Canada, and in size and comfort they will excel any similar vessels in that service. During the summer season the northern terminus of the voyage of these vessels is Skagway, Alaska, while in the winter months the ships operate as far north as Stewart.

The appearance of the three new ships is distinctive, and is due in part to the high service speed. The cruiser stern adopted gives easier propulsion and the three funnels were fitted to suit the particular arrangements of the boilers, and are all working funnels. There are six decks in all on the new boats. The lower deck extends forward and aft of the machinery space, the main, upper and bridge decks are continuous fore and aft, while above the bridge deck are the promenade and boat decks.

The steel construction throughout has been under the special survey of the British Corporation, and the ships are classed B. S. with freeboard. In addition, all requirements of the British Board of Trade, Home Office Factory Act and Canadian steamships inspection service have been complied with. The watertight subdivision has been arranged in accordance with the latest Board of Trade regulations, there being eight watertight bulkheads extending to the main deck as well as additional subdivision in the form of oil bunker bulkheads. The watertight doors are all fitted with oil centric alarms. In high speed vessels of this class it is not general practice to provide a complete cellular double bottom all, fore and aft, but this feature has been incorporated in these vessels with a view to giving additional safety. The double bottom is subdivided into several watertight and oil-tight compartments, which are used for carrying water ballast, fresh water, feed water, and oil for fuel. The vessels, the third of which was recently launched, Caird and Co., with A. T. Wall and Co., as the architects.

They were launched, were built at Birkenhead

The first of a series of meetings of cheesemakers of Central Ontario will be held in Stirling Wednesday afternoon under auspices of the Association and plans for the forthcoming season well thoroughly discussed as well as the many problems which confront the cheesemaking industry this year.

J. P. Griffin, dairy produce dealer for the district, and J. P. Mr. Griffin was one of the chief speakers at the meeting.

Nervous Exhaustion

A Trouble Which Leaves People Depressed and Unhappy

Nervous exhaustion is often the cause of much unhappiness. Instead of the sufferer and his friends do not recognize it as an ailment. So there and even to himself, he seems to be merely ill-tempered, crotchy and irritable.

The prevalence for which women and girls often blamed is not the fault—it is their misfortune. Their nerves are "all on edge." The least shock, a sudden noise, or even being spoken to unawares causes real suffering and no one ought to be surprised if hasty words are the result. But this does not mean bad temper; it means starved, exhausted nerves.

Headaches, low spirits, poor appetite, weariness and lack of energy follow nerve exhaustion, and relief is easy to obtain. What the starved nerves need is richer, better blood and this can be obtained through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By their blood enriching qualities these pills do wonders; nervous men and women become calm, steady and energetic under their influence. New blood is what does the work. To obtain it give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LOGGERS AWAIT ICE BREAK-UP

Million Cords of Pulpwood Ready for Floating At Once

Boston, April 16—Canada and North ern Maine are now waiting for the ice to break up to allow the drive of the four foot pulp wood and logs. In the drive, water is the all important thing and crews have been assembled so as to be on hand promptly when the ice starts to go and the water runs clear. The logs are dumped into the streams and brooks as soon as the latter are open. They are sent swirling and rushing by the turbulent spring floods to the rivers where they empty into the ponds and lakes. The logs are held in check there by a trip-boom until conditions are right for filling the big towing-boom. This is hung from both sides of the outlet like an immense bag, by long sticks, chained end to end. It can be filled only in favorable wind. When the right wind comes along, the trip-boom is opened and the logs float into the so-called bag. When the "bag" or boom is filled the ends are joined or "married," in the driving parlance, and it is ready to be towed to the next point of release.

This sort of driving applies only to the brooks and streams. Ponds and lakes do not open usually until the middle of May. Important driving waters like Moosehead and Chesuncook Lakes generally open up about the tenth of May, with a few others a little later. All the driving tributaries will be fully worked before the opening of the lake and pond navigation. During the past winter, 900,000 cords of pulp wood were cut in Maine, most of which have to be driven. This is less than usual. The Great Northern Paper Company, the largest wood handler in the state, had more than 400,000 cords of wood at its mills the first of January, besides the amount that was not but still in the woods. Th mill supply alone is sufficient for approximately two years.

The Great Northern is the principal operator on the West Branch of the Penobscot. For more than a century, then Penobscot was the most famous log-driving river in the country. Its numerous tributaries are now followed wherever trees were cut or logs were driven. One the West Bank this spring in Great Northern has about 185,000 cords of pulp wood above Ripogenus Dam. Four of this is on the river below Chesuncook but the greater part is from trees feelled in the northern interior of Aroostook County, in the Saint John River region. This is to be brought—incidentally against natures designs—up over the height of land separating the Saint John River water from the Penobscot, and is to be driven with the Penobscot wood.

During the past winter gasolene tractor trains hauling four foot wood from Musquacook Lakes south, have deposited it on the ice of Chesuncook Lake at a higher elevation, thus reversing the natural order for driving. According to the original topography of the country, and water transportation for forest logs in Maine, this wood should have been moved down the Allagash River as was the bulk of the original product of this section. But war stepped in and by building a dam at Chase Carry at the outlet of Churchill Lake raised the body of that water to a level with the water in Eagle Lake next south. Now, with the breaking up of the ice in those lakes the wood which was dumped last winter will be rafted and towed, or carried by the wind, south into Eagle Lake to a point on the west shore about half way south, There it will be lifted by gasolene power stackers, loaded into cards on the tracks of a logging railroad and hauled south again to Umgazookalus Lake. Down this it will be floated and through connecting waters to Chesuncook, rafted or boomed, and towed the twenty mile length of that lake to Ripogenus Dam. Then it is to be sluiced into the famous gorge through which it will go rushing to the mills of the Great Northern Paper Company at Millinocket.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE LOBSTERMEN

Govt. to Operate Collection Boats Along Coast and Deliver Fish

Boston, April 16—Nova Scotia lobster fishermen will materially benefit through operation by the Dominion Government of collection boats that will land lobsters in Boston at the saving of about $2 a crate, and in better condition due to less handling from trap to market.

During the fishing season, April 20 to June 20, a total of about 600 crates a week will be shipped from the grounds on the Cape Sabrough shore as far west as Owls Head, Halifax County, and the collection boats are expected to make the run to this port in from 30 to 36 hours.

Providing that the catch is normal it is estimated that the lobster men will effect a saving of $40,000 for the season. In the majority of instances the lobsters catchers will ship to commission merchants here, and the lenitative freight rate is $3 a crate against $13 a crate as heretofore. The new system of operation will apply not only to lobsters but to mackerel and other fish in season.

The fleet, comprising of about a dozen gasoline boats, operated by wholesalers of Lockeport, Mosher's point in Nova Scotia will not be affected by the Dominion refusing to allow dealers buy their lobsters at shipping points for delivery at frequent intervals during the season alongside the traps from which the retail market is supplied. Raymond, M. E. has been a central point for shipments of lobsters and the regular line steamers, when the season is in full swing often land there as many as 500 crates for a single trip.

Babies Are Viewed But Not Touched

Toronto, April 15 (CP)—When the public has the opportunity of inspecting the new Private General Hospital, now nearing completion a feature to attract attention will be the "baby-viewing room". Attached to each nursery is such a room, where admiring friends and relatives can gaze upon young Canada, and yet not touch or handle. Under old conditions the admirers of babies lipped into the nursery even though rules forbid such tactics. But now they may inspect the babe without disturbing the hygienic surroundings.

Two floors of the nine-story building have been arranged exclusively for maternity cases. Here babies will start life in a strictly modern atmosphere. The safety, health and comfort of mother and child are the three vital considerations in these quarters. Wide, silent corridors divide the rows of cosy, sunny rooms for the mothers. Babies are cared for in nurseries occupying three locations on the two floors. Each nursery is built so as to receive the maximum amount of sunshine, and that sun passes through "via-glas" windows, so that every particle of benefit may be transmitted to the tender occupants.

Every baby cot is within an individual, glass-partitioned cubicle. Every cubicle has its own wash-basin. Twice weekly, automatically changing, circulates throughout.

MATERIAL HERE FOR NEW BRIDGE

Construction May Not Start For at Least One Week Yet

The contract authorized by the City Council to be signed between The Holdcroft Construction Company Ltd. of Kingston, and the Corporation for the construction of a new cement bridge over the Moira River at Bridge street, was signed by Mayor Reid and the City Clerk for the city and A. B. Holdcroft for the construction company on Thursday afternoon. Immediately on the signing of the contract Mr. Holdcroft announced he would start work and yesterday some of the material was delivered at Victoria Park, which will be the supply base for the new bridge.

The Parks Board gave the city permission to use this park for a supply base on the conditions that it be restored to its present condition at the termination of the work and this the council agreed to do. This park is very handy to the work and will lessen the haulage problem to a large extent. It is the intention of Mr. Holdcroft to place all material on the ground before commencing the work. Mr. Roe will be superintendent of construction. He has worked on many bridges such as is contemplated in this city.

ARMY OFFICER WAS INDICTED

Former Belleville Man is Charged With Murder of Wife

Topeka, Kans., April 19.—Less than a year after the attractive young wife of Major Charles A. Shepard died in his quarters at Fort Riley, central Kansas military post, the middle aged medical officer was charged with first degree murder. Shepard formerly lived in Belleville, Ont.

A federal grand jury returned yesterday the indictment, after questioning about 30 witnesses. The list included twenty Miss Grace Brandon, family flying field stenographer, and Major Paul B. Hawley, medical officer stationed in Nicaragua.

Investigation disclosed Major Shepard was infatuated with Miss Brandon while his second wife, 21 years his junior, suffered a mysterious illness. She formerly was Zenana McCosker, Los Angeles. She died last June 15.

Arrest of Shepard in Denver startled his associates. He was stripped of his uniform and held in the county jail in lieu of $25,000 bond.

Alleged to Have Sold Articles on Which Insurance Claims Were Made

FIRE AT TWEED

Mrs. Clara Knight, formerly of Napanee, but now a resident of Tweed, and Thomas Oak, a hostler in the home of Knight's, were arrested late Thursday night by Provincial Constables Clubb and Franks of Kingston on a warrant issued from the Provincial Police headquarters in this city. Provincial Constables Hannon of Belleville and Hill of Madoc went to Kingston yesterday and brought the two back for trial.

Today they appeared in police court before Magistrate Mikel each separately charged "that they did attempt to obtain the sum of $1,000 from the Provincial Insurance Company by falsely representing certain articles to be burned in a house in Tweed by a fire which occurred on April 5th." It is alleged by the police that the articles for which insurance was claimed were sold by Mrs. Knight and Thomas Oak previous to the fire. G. A. Payne, acting for the defense, stated to the court that he was not ready to proceed with the case and requested a remand of one week, which was granted by His Worship. Bail was requested and allowed, the surety being $1,000 in each instance.

WELLAND CANALS

OFFICIAL OPENING

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., April 19—With the huge locks already manned by operators-in-training, the Welland Canal faces its official opening Monday morning with the Port Colborne harbor completely with sailing craft. The official opening the new canal will take place July 1 by which time the twin locks at Thorold will be in operation.

A girl is never really as pretty as a picture unless she is in a happy frame of mind.

Vessels to Race to Enter Canal First

TORONTO, April 19.—CP—The blue waters of Lake Ontario are due for a merry old churning this week-end, when a thirteen vessel race for the honor of officially opening the Welland Canal will be run. There is nothing official about the race at all, but it is for the privilege of sailing through the first lock first. Two of the favorites for the race will leave Toronto some time today in order to make Port Weller before nightfall and then all set to make the canal in at daybreak Monday. They are the schooner Kingsdale and the steamer John Irwin. No ceremony is scheduled for the opening, although the captain of the winning boat will probably run casually from the bridge and waggishly wave a rope's end to the loser as is so often the custom. Nobody does the victorious skipper omit this little gesture after his vessel pulls ahead. Its meaning is obvious to the disgusted runner-up. "Do you want a tow?" The supreme insult of the Great Lakes is what the rope's end implies.

LIMITS NAVIES

Canadians Should He Says, Be Conscious of Its Success

HALIFAX, N.S., April 19—CP—Col. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence and Canada's representative at the London Naval Conference, arrived here tonight from London.

"To have the three greatest naval powers of the world in agreement definitely limiting naval armament and taking immediate practical steps for definite reduction must be regarded as a long step forward. Canadians should be particularly solacious of its success when you remember that one of these powers is our neighbor directly to the south, another our next neighbor over the Pacific and third the British Commonwealth in which we are associated."

SOME ESCAPE

Bucharest, April 19 (CP)—Six bodies of men, women and children were recovered from the ruins of the fourteenth century church in the town of Colentina which was struck by a fire and panic disaster during Good Friday services last night. There were still forty persons whose bodies or ashes it was feared were still among the debris. Seventy persons were seventeen persons who it first had been thought had perished, but who immediately took up surrounding country where they were found wandering dazed and terrified.

Chaotic Romania, April 19 (CP)— One hundred and fifty persons were burned to death within a few minutes when fire had swept the church in which Good Friday vigil service was being conducted caught fire and was destroyed.

Just three who were inside the building when the blaze began, escaped without the death of the others to their pious anxiety for the safety of their families and kindred which they rushed to rescue. They turned finally to the door, the one means of egress, pushed inward and the mass pushedsticken and crushed those nearest flames, jammed against it and died.

MAYOR ASKS COOPERATION OF PUBLIC IN HANDLING TRAFFIC

Requests Merchants Not To Park Own Cars on Front Street

Mayor Reid today issued the following statement in regard to the handling of traffic during the time of the construction of the new lower bridge across the Moira River:

To the Public.

Re Traffic on Front Street

"I am going to ask your wholehearted cooperation in regard to the traffic on Front street while the lower bridge is under construction. It will be necessary for every citizen to cooperate with the council and the police so as to save trouble and congestion while this construction is going on.

"We are putting on a traffic officer and intend to divert the traffic down Front street so the tourists will be able to see our city and probably spend some money in the city but heavy trucks will be asked to go down Pinnacle street. The tourist traffic we want on Front street. We can accomplish this if we have the cooperation of the citizens and especially the merchants.

"First, I am going to ask every merchant and business man to refrain from parking his car on Front street.

"Second, I will ask the citizens who are in the habit of using their cars on Front street to refrain from it.

"Third, truck drivers must not allow their trucks to be parked any longer than when they are unloading their merchandise and that should be done before 8 a.m.

"We want the tourists as they come through Belleville to have a chance to deal in our stores and stop at our hotels and restaurants and to accomplish this we must do our part by keeping Front street clear.

"I hope and believe the citizens will loyally cooperate and that it will not be necessary to pass a by-law prohibiting."

Yours truly,
H. A. REID,
Mayor.

Ottawa, April 19. — Regret at the death of Senator Desaulles was expressed today by Hon. Hewitt Bostock, Speaker of the Senate. Senator Bostock said that although Senator Desaulles had not been much part in discussions of the upper chamber, he had been one of the regular attendants at committees. 19TH ANNIVERSARY OF ROSLIN L.O.B.I.

I found that ALL-BRAN was the aid nature needed to relieve my trouble

This startling letter from an ex-service man will interest everyone who suffers from constipation:

"I was discharged after the World War with heart trouble and lost stomach. I had never seen about $1500. Since then I've spent that sum and a lot on doctors, and operations and medicines. I always was bothered with constipation.

"I told my wife to get some kind of light food. She got ALL-BRAN. I ate it for breakfast, lunch and dinner, about a package I suppose; left off with it each meal. I have been doing this for a month. Now I have no more trouble with constipation. I say it is the cause. I have a good appetite. And now I am sticking fresh and believe I am getting well."—Gomer C. Davis, Address on request.

No Traces of Lake Freighter

Bellevue Boat Made Way Up Lake When Storm Subsided

Special by Staff Reporter

TRENTON, April 19—Although search parties failed to bring to light any news of a lake freighter which was said to have been in trouble off Consecon, it is thought that the ship probably came in close to shore and, then storm of last Thursday abated somewhat. Fishermen in the vicinity had not seen the boat, but had been asked to keep a sharp lookout for it. The storm has abated somewhat on Lake Ontario, however, and the car ferries from Cobourg made the sixty mile trip across to Rochester without trouble yesterday, although they had laid in Cobourg for two days prior to that. Few of the fishermen ventured out to the open lake until today owing to the heavy seas which were running. They report that so far the catch has been as good as usual.

Trenton Teams Will Play Ball

One Girls' Soft Ball Team Will Represent Mayor Fraser's Town

Special by Staff Reporter

Trenton, Ont., April 19—Trenton had two delegates at the Ontario Softball meeting which was held at Kingston yesterday, the delegates having been appointed at an open meeting held at the Town Hall on Thursday evening. Although the attendance was smaller than expected, enthusiasm ran high, and a fast league may be expected again this year. There'll will likely be only one girls' team this year and they will affiliate with the Ontario Association, so they will be able to bring outside teams in for exhibition games. Another meeting will be held on May 1st at the same place. It was further decided to have all games played at the shore, or if these grounds were not available, at the College St. school grounds. Officers for 1930 will be elected at the meeting on May 1st.

Old Landmark at Consecon Goes

Home Occupied by Dr. Van Luven is Being Dismantled

Special Staff Reporter.

TRENTON, C..., April 19—One of the oldest landmarks in Consecon has been torn down, this being the home of Dr. Thornton, which was recently sold to Dr. Vanluven of Consecon. This solidly built house, one of the first in Prince Edward County to be built of brick was built many years ago by Dr. J. Bean, who was buried to death when the house burned to the ground about fourteen years ago. It will be remembered by many of the older residents of the district. Dr. Thornton purchased the property after the fire and now Dr. Vanluven is building a fine home of cut stone on the site of the old house. When completed it will be one of the finest in the whole district.

Settle Grievance In Police Court

Special by Staff Reporter

TRENTON, Ont., April 19 — A grievance of long standing was aired in Police Court here when John Dalton was charged with assaulting Fred Woodcock. Both are residents of Trenton, but Woodcock is a 230 pounder, while Dalton is a man of small stature. Woodcock swore that Dalton struck him over the head with a piece of timber and then the scrap was on. It was brought out in evidence that the argument had started in the first place over such an ordinary thing as a cow, but heretofore the matter had not come to blows. Magistrate McGuire fined Dalton five dollars and costs and then another charge of assault was laid against Woodcock and he was assessed the same amount. An aged pensioner was charged with passing a worthless cheque to a taxi driver for ten dollars, but as restitution was made, he was advised his liberty with a warning.

Popcorn Kernel Stuck in Throat

Successful Operation Performed on Bayside Boy in Toronto

Special by Staff Reporter

TRENTON, Ont., April 19 — On Thursday morning at Toronto, Garnet Jones, year old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Jones of Bayside, underwent an operation at the Hospital for Sick Children for the removal of a popcorn kernel from his throat which had been lodged there since Tuesday morning. The unfortunate child had swallowed several of the kernels when one lodged in his throat, and despite everything that was done, both by the parents and a local doctor, it could not be dislodged. He was accordingly taken to Toronto where a delicate operation was performed successfully. Although the kernel did not stop his breathing entirely, the child had great difficulty in getting enough breath to sustain life and there is little doubt that had not prompt action been taken, serious results would have taken place.

Freaks of Nature

(Descrocio Post)

The discovery of an albino in a black squirrel family in Tyendinaga Township suggested to mind the following article which we wrote for Rod and Gun in Canada some years ago.

The question is often asked, why is an albino, or why a melano?

The best authorities are agreed that bird or animal gets its colouration through pigment or coloring matter in its blood or skin substance. Thus a lack of pigment makes the snow-white, pink-pupiled creature—the albino; too much pigment or colouring, the coal-black bird, or animal—the melano. Albinism in a species is considered a manifestation of physical weakness, retardation, strength.

Albinos and melanos are "freaks of Nature." The black squirrel, a colour phase of the grey (sciurus carolinus), is a case in point. The cross fox, silver grey fox, the black fox, are all color phases of the common red variety (vulpus fulva) and are melanistic. Of the larger mammals of the North American continent, the black fox is considered the greatest example of melanism extant. On the other hand, white mice, white rats, white rabbits, white deer, etc., etc., each and every one of them having pink pupils, are good examples of albinism.

With nature all things are possible. While crows, white black birds (brown grackle or red wing), white blackbirds, white ducks, white robins (by the way a woman as Crosscove, Prince Edward county, has a snow white, pink-eyed robin at writing) too close inbreeding.

While foxes, white wolves, white moose, etc., etc., are just as possible as are black hawks, black eagles, black mice, black rats, black rabbits, black marmots, black wolves, black deer, black moose, etc., etc.

As regards the human race—Martin Johnson, found in the South Seas a tribe of blacks of which one in every hundred was snow-white with pink eyes. Albinism—caused probably by

To go farther: It is quite possible for white parents to produce a freak (or nature in a black child (one a negro). And if albinism is a manifestation of physical weakness and melanism a sign of strength—

Special music was given by the choir, including a vocal solo by Mrs. George White who gave "Holy City". Special Palm Sunday Hymns were chosen, and the message of the day was given from John 12: 12 and 13. "Much people . . . took branches of the palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." Rev. O. W. Rivers in dealing with the pubject spoke of the changeable character of the crowds, and their different attitude during the scenes of the next few days. The evening service was preceded by an organ recital of twenty minutes by Miss Ramsay, and the service was opened by a short period of song service.

Brown's Flats, N. B. April 14 (Special) Another letter to the great work of Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing for the women of Canada comes from Mrs. Fred C. Belyea, a well known resident of this place. She writes:—"I used Dodd's Kidney Pills for my back which was so lame I could hardly get around the house or do my work. After using Dodd's Kidney Pills and after the first few doses I noticed a difference. My back on taking them and when I had taken the boxes, I was quite well once again."

Other sufferers of Backache tell of pains relieved and health restored through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They act directly on the kidneys. They strengthen the kidneys and put them in shape so that the blood is free of the blood. They do one thing only, but they do that one thing well.

MAY EXPLAIN UNIVERSE

New York, April 19.—The New York Times, on April 15 quoted Dr. John G. Stewart, associate professor of astronomical physics at Princeton University, as saying evidence regarding present theories as to the origin of the planets may be found by a study of the orbit of the recently discovered "Planet X."

His explained that the commonly held theory as to the origin of the solar system is that the matter from which the planets were formed was torn from the sun's surface by the attraction of a passing star. Much of this matter condensed into the planets and they at first revolved about the sun in highly eccentric orbits. Gradually, however, they were forced into approximately circular orbits by the friction of the dispersed matter which did not form into planets.

He said that if it is established that the newly found body is planetary in nature and is traveling in an ellipse instead of a circle, it would indicate that so far it has been exempt from the influencer that coerced the other planets.

Flagstaff, Ariz, April 19—Denial to the contrary, Dr. V. M. Slipher, director of the Lowell Observatory here, believes evidence indicates that the recently discovered "Planet X" is the long-sought trans-Neptunian planet, and is not a comet.

Commenting on articles appearing in current issues of natural scientific publications, Dr. Slipher said misinterpretation of his announcement of the discovery was evident.

"No announcement of the discovery was made until Lowell astronomers were sure that it was the trans-Neptunian planet," he said. "And I have at no time, intentionally at least, intimated that there was any doubts in Lowell Observatory officials minds, including my own, that the point of light is anything but a trans-Neptunian planet. Any inference to the contrary is a misinterpretation of technical terms."

Thinks Planet May Be Comet

Challenges Identity of Astral Wanderer as Neptunian Neighbor

Berkeley, Calif., April 19—Identity of the new astral body discovered by Lowell Observatory astronomers in Arizona last January as the long-sought trans-Neptunian planet was challenged April 14 by A. O. Leuschner, director of the University of California student observatory.

While agreeing with the discoverers that the object is beyond Neptune, Professor Leuschner declined to accept it as the ninth member of the planetary family. He said the "Day sky-wanderer might be a large asteroid, a long-period planetary object, or possibly a comet, adding, however, that its discovery was "of great significance because it extends the limits of the solar system."

"The computations of mass made here," Professor Leuschner explained, "indicate the object is too small to have caused the deviation in Neptune's orbit which originally led to the suspicion that a trans-Neptunian planet exists."

LIVING COSTS ON THE DOWNWARD GRADE

By Thomas Wayling
(Special to the Ontario Intelligencer, Copyright 1930)

Ottawa, April 19—The cost of living in Canada is still on the decline. The statisticians of the federal govern. ment report that wholesale prices in the Dominion are the lowest since October, 1916. Based on 1926 as 100 the March, 1930, index was 91.9 as against 94 in February.

Vegetable products dropped from 88.7 in February to 86 in March and there were lower quotations in sugar grains and rubber. Animal products dropped three points as well as salmon, butter and eggs. Textiles dropped 1¼ points. Raw and partly manufactured good were lower because of the reduced prices for grain, tin, wool, silk rubber and cotton. Fully and chiefly manufactured goods were down a point.

The weakness of the wheat market has had a good deal to do with present lower prices. On March 13, cash wheat at Winnipeg closed at 105⅞, and on March 21 the exportable surplus was 156,147,227 bushels.

He is indeed a poor fish who never knows when to keep his mouth shut.

Man has his troubles the same as woman, but he has less to say about them.

Some people seem to have an excuse for everything but living.

The man who thinks marriage is a lottery is lucky if he only thinks so.

Speculation On Early Voyage

Long-Buried Relics Are Discovered on Newfoundland Coast

(Special to the Ontario Intelligencer Copyright 1930)

St. John's Nfld., April 19—From the deep mud of a pond near the seashore at Bonavista have come long-buried relics to evoke a new speculative inquiry into the explorations of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, who "in the year of our Lord 1583, with other gentlemen assisting him in that action, intended to discover and to plant Christian inhabitants in places convenient upon those large and ample countries extended northward from the Cape of Florida....yea, not in the actual possession of any Christian prince."

Four years ago an ancient boat was discovered at Bonavista, only to be broken up without careful examination, the only part of its oaken walls now remaining being a walking stick in possession of the rector of the parish. It has just been learned that a second boat was found at the same time, with a brass disc, shilling size, embedded in the ancient wood.

The date, 1583, clearly discernible, and a clear cut C graven in the token under a bird with spreading wings, have given rise to belief that the disintegrated craft may have been some part of the equipment of Raleigh's step-brother, whose venture brought him nothing but shipwreck and death and a front rank among the gentlemen mariners who took possession of North America's for God and Elizabeth.

Whether or not the finds at Bonavista may be directly connected with the Gilbert expedition, which reached Newfoundland in four ships and left the remnants of three of them to knock about various latitudes of the North Atlantic, is pure conjecture, but they may very well be the remains of certain of the 36 ships of all nations that thronged the harbor of St. John's on the August morning when Sir Humphrey took possession of everything within a radius of 200 leagues in the name of His royal mistress. Fruitless Venture

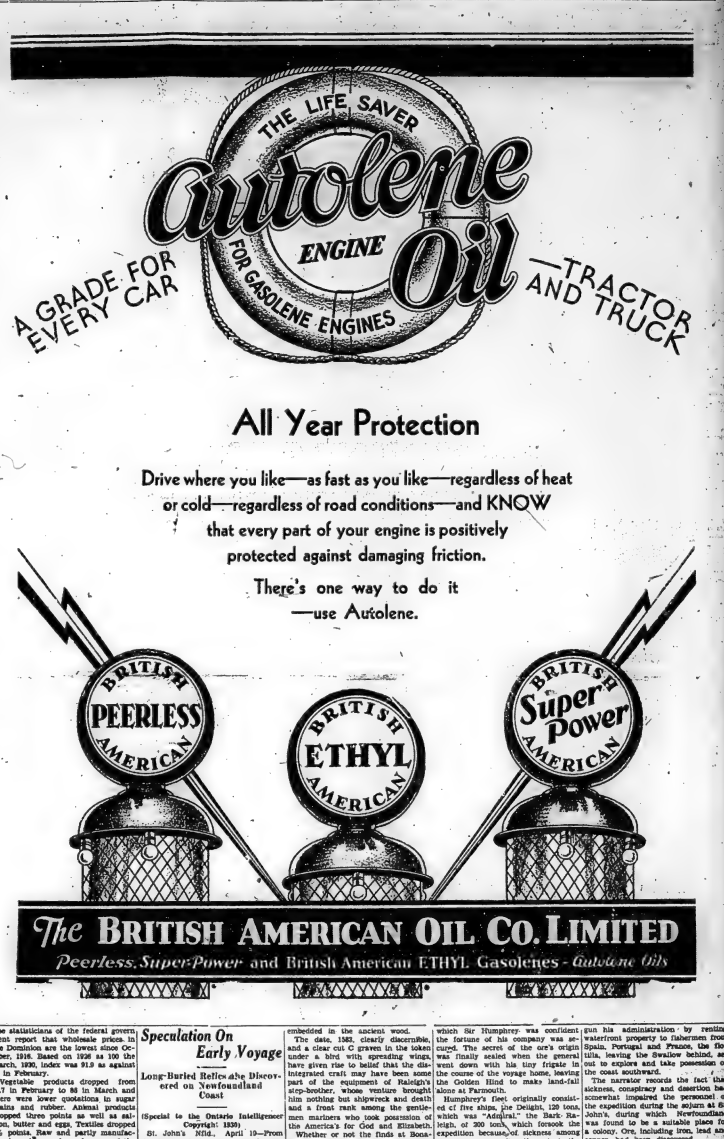
The proclamation on the fifth of August, 1583, followed a voyage of fifty-three days from Cawset Bay, near Plymouth, and was the high point of a venture, profitless from a material point of view that saw one ship left in Newfoundland and one wrecked near Cape Breton, with ore specimens purporting to be silver, in which Sir Humphrey was confident the fortune of his company was assured. The secret of the ore's origin was finally sealed when the general went down with his tiny frigate in the course of the voyage home, leaving the Golden Hind to make land-fall alone at Falmouth.

Humphrey's fleet originally consisted of five ships, the Delight, 120 tons, which was "Admiral," the Bark Raleigh, of 200 tons, which forsook the expedition because of sickness among the crew soon after the start, the Golden Hind, 40 tons, the Swallow, 40 tons, and the frigate Squirrel, of 10 tons burthen.

Sailing on June 11, the fleet made the Newfoundland coast far north in the vicinity of Notre Dame bay on July 30, and followed the coast south to St. John's, where they made harbor on August 3. The crew of the Swallow having pirate blood in their veins, had held up and ransacked a homeward bound fishing bark. It was this same crew, transhipped to the Delight, which went down off Cape Breton on August 29, an occurrence seen by Hayes as a judgment of God, although Captain Maurice Browne, who had no hand in the piracy, also was lost, and fourteen of the crew survived.

Personal Imparted

On August 20, after Gilbert had begun his administration by renting waterfront property to fishermen from Spain, Portugal and France, the Squirrel, leaving the Swallow behind, set out to explore and take possession of the coast southward.



The narrator records the fact that sickness, conspiracy and desertion had somewhat impaired the personnel of the expedition during the sojurn at St. John's, during which Newfoundland was found to be a suitable place for a colony. Ore, including iron, lead and copper, had been discovered.

The voyagers intended to call at Sable Island, where they had been told cattle had been set to breed by the Portuguese several years before, and after eight days of bad weather had succeeded in reaching Cape Breton.

The loss of the Delight strengthened the opinion among the crews that their better course was homeward to England and not down the coast of America.

Consistently he refused to forsake the 10-ton Squirrel in favor of the Golden Hind. On September 9, overtaken by a storm near the Azores, the Squirrel's lights suddenly went out. That afternoon, sitting aloft with a book in his hand, Gilbert had called out to the Hind: "We are as near heaven by sea as by land."

No man can be free who is not master of himself.

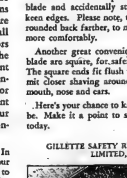
The New Gillette Razor and Blade ...Cleans in a Jiffy without taking apart

THE old Gillette was a good servant. The New Gillette Blade and Razor is a better one — very much better.

You never need waste your time wiping this razor dry. And there's never any "razor pull" to deprive you of shaving comfort. These are only two of many improvements that have been made.

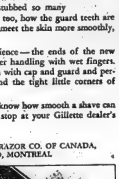
In tackling the problem of "razor pull," thousands of men were interviewed. Tens of thousands of razors were examined. The evidence all pointed one way. Most razors had been dropped and the corners dented. The dent threw the blade out of alignment. And this caused "razor pull." The smallest dent could do great harm to your Gillette is a finely precisioned instrument.

Now the trouble is solved. In the New Gillette Razor the four corners have been reinforced to withstand the hardest knocks. The four corners of the new blade are cut out—The blade is not held at its corners at all when cap and guard are screwed together. There's no chance of its being thrown out of alignment even if the razor is dropped.



When you're through shaving with this new razor, there's no wiping necessary. You don't need to take it apart. Because this new blade is specially processed to resist rust, you merely hold razor under hot running water, shake thoroughly . . . and lay on the shelf.

Gone are the old posts that held the blade and accidentally stubbed so many keen edges. Please note, too, how the guard teeth are rounded back farther, to meet the skin more smoothly, more comfortably.



Another great convenience—the ends of the new blade are square, for safer handling with wet fingers. The square ends fit flush with cap and guard and permit closer shaving around the tight little corners of mouth, nose and ears.

Here's your chance to know how smooth a shave can be. Make it a point to stop at your Gillette dealer's today.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

NEVER AGAIN

by

Y. E. KATES

Copyright, 1930, International Features Service, Inc

It was their first quarrel, and the enormity of it overwhelmed them both. Lola sulked into her coffee cup. Denny barricaded himself with the morning paper and pretended to read the obituaries. The frigid silence of fortified pride hung over the blue and gold breakfast nook. At length the young husband dropped the paper over his breakfast dishes, slammed his hat down upon his head, and started off, without the customary good-bye kiss. He had not one thing to say to be left. "I won't be home for dinner to-night," he growled. And closed the door behind him—with terrifying finality.

When he had gone, Lola wept into her coffee, her quick feminine mind devising at the same time various schemes for vengeance.

She would go back to her mother's. She would commit suicide. She would run away. She simply couldn't think of anything drastic enough with which to punish Denny. The brute,—the monster,—the—the—so-and-so!

He wouldn't be home for dinner. Well, then, neither would she. Did he think she was going to sit about at home in agony all day, and perhaps all night, while he went out Heaven knows where or with whom?

Recklessly she tumbled the dishes into the sink, and donning her hat and coat, she left the house.

She wasn't coming back. She was going to do something terrible, like jumping into the river, or getting run over by a truck. She compromised temporarily by going to the movies.

For a half hour she sat in the darkness of the theatre and wept into her handkerchief while the audience roared with laughter at the antics of a popular comedian.

And then, suddenly, she realized the reason for her intense misery. She had started that quarrel, last night. The fault was hers. She had objected, in senseless jealousy, to Denny's friends. She had said cruel and unjust things about them, and he had defended them loyally, boldly. She had lost her temper, and then a real quarrel had followed. A useless, bitter quarrel, in which she had said painful things she did not mean and in which Denny had retorted just as mercilessly.

She was a blind fool, she told herself. But it was not too late, she hoped, to remedy her folly. She would apologize to Denny, whenever he should return. And never again would she allow foolishness to jeopardize their happiness.

She left the theatre in a happier frame of mind. She would buy some roses for the tiny living room. She would dress in her best, that evening. And when Denny returned—

Someone in the crowded street was calling her name. She turned to be embraced by her youngest sister, Mary, a vivid, flushed, excited young girl, who seemed almost to dance up and down in her eagerness to speak.

"Lola, dear," she chattered, "I need you so badly. I've been invited out for tonight by someone I'm just crazy about and I haven't a single enough coat or hat in which to dazzle him. Won't you be an angel and—and—you know!"

Lola understood.

"I have some shopping to do, sis," she answered, "so if you want it right now——"

Mary nodded eagerly.

"Well, then," went on Lola generously, "here's my key. You can take my fur coat and my new green hat, and remember to leave the key under the mat on the porch, or I won't be able to get into the house."

Mary kissed her rapturously, took the key and sped away.

Late that afternoon Lola returned home. Confidently she raised the mat and lay on the porch and stared in dismay at the blank floor. Mary in her excitement, had forgotten to leave the key.

There was no way of getting into the house. She remembered only too well that every window was locked. She would have to sit and wait for Denny. And then she recalled that Denny was not coming for dinner.

She could think of no way in which to recover her key. Mary lived too far away, and could not be reached by telephone.

"I'll go back into town," she decided at length, "and have my dinner in a restaurant, and wander around a bit to spend the time. And then, if Denny isn't home yet, I'll just have to sit on the porch and wait."

It was quite early, however, when Denny came home, a very meek and contrite Denny, bearing a peace-offering of candy and flowers. The darkened house filled him with vague misgivings. He tramped from room to room, driven by a strange, nameless fear. Finally he laughed at himself for foolishness.

"Why should she be home?" he thought. "I told her I wasn't coming for dinner, and so she's spending her time at the movies or at a friend's house, or—someplace."

He settled down to wait. There came to him suddenly the sound of a motor. He walked curiously to the window and looked out, and the sight that met his eyes staggered him as nothing he had been shot. For there, before his very door in a luxurious car sat his wife and a strange man, embracing each other with a fervor that left nothing to one's imagination.

He was dressed in her finery, her new fur coat and her newest hat—the hat of a man, a philanderer, a Lord knows what!

Flushed with sudden fury, Denny rushed out of the house. Maddened, raging, he jerked open the door, and pulled the man out of the car.

"Make love to my wife, will you?" he cried. "I'll——you——"

He—swung his fists, the stranger dodged, and the woman Denny had called his wife leaped out of the car and caught his arms.

"Denny!" she cried. "What on

Once again Denny was staggered. For the woman before him was not Lola, but her sister, Mary. There came to him, as never before, a realization of the blindness of his love. He apologized with a humility he had never before experienced.

"We were on our way to the theatre," explained Mary, "and I remembered that I had walked off with Lola's key. What a temper you have!"

Denny took the key in a daze, and watched Mary and her sweetheart depart.

He was chastened, he swore earnestly. In regard to Lola from now on. The gentlest, lovingest husband that ever breathed.

Then, returning home a short while later, found Denny awaiting her upon the porch, a box of candy in one hand and a bouquet of flowers in the other, and a look in his eyes that told her their quarrel was cold and forgotten. She knew, finally, that never again would the misery of unreasoning animosity come between them and their happiness.

Famous Diamond Basis of Suit

Stone Said to Have Been Taken by Warren Hastings

Washington, April 17—Once the eye of an Indian image, the famous Nasak diamond turned up in the Court of Customs Appeals, where it was decided whether the blazing brilliant "Mary" is worthy of merely a diamond, cut but not set, suitable for use in the manufacture of jewelry."

The stone was brought before the court under guard. Reposing in a black box, it was exhibited to the court and to many women who had been attracted by the novelty, valued at a large sum. In 1837 its value was fixed at £30,000.

In 1827, on instructions from the Treasury Department, the Nasak diamond was admitted to the United States duty free, as a work of art more than 100 years old. Treasures of this classification are not dutiable.

Classification Protested

Action was brought by Mayers, Osterwald and Mahfeld Inc., wholesalers and dealers in diamonds, pearls and precious stones, to have the stone classed as dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem. They urged that the diamond was not a work of art and that it could be cut into many smaller stones and used in the manufacture of jewelry. The protestants asserted that virtually any large diamond might be classed as an artistic antique since the age of these stones is not questioned.

The history of the stone showed that it was taken from a temple some time around 1600, although the history dated back to the fifteenth or six teenth century. The Nasak was thought to have come originally from near Nasak. It was said to have been taken by Warren Hastings from the last independent Prince of Oudh in 1818, and sold to the East India Company. At the time it was found the diamond weigher 80½ carats, but its shape was described as bad. A jeweler named Emanuel bought the stone in London in 1831 for £7,200. He sold it to the Marquis of Westminster in 1837, according to the brief, and the Marquis had it recut to a three-sided brilliant of 78¾ carats. The brief added:

Gained by Cutting

"We have seen that the 'original weight' was 80¾ carats and this was now reduced to 78¾ carats, a very slight sacrifice compared with loss suffered by the Koh-i-Noor and some other Indian stones when recut in London and Amsterdam.

"If gained so much in the lapidary's hands that this gem is now reputed to be worth £36,000 to £30,000, and it must not be forgotten that this stone was sold when times were bad and money scarce."

A decision is expected in about a month.

CASSIBO DEATH PROBE ENDED

It Is Believed That at Least 3 Trains Passed Over Body

"We, the jury empanelled to enquire into the death of Paul Cassibo find that he came to his death on the 12th day of April, 1930 on the Canadian Pacific Railway right of way a short distance east of Sulphide station in the township of Hungerford in the county of Hastings when struck by train no extra 1303 west bound. We find that no blame can be attached to the train crew."

The inquest concerning this death was held in Tweed on Tuesday night with Dr. Mather, coroner, presiding and B. C. Donnan, Crown Attorney examining the several witnesses that were produced by Provincial Constable Hill of Madoc, who investigated. From the evidence there was no mention made of any extenuating circumstances and all the witnesses agreed they did not believe it to be a case of suicide. Cassibo was killed some time after seven thirty o'clock on Saturday night, but his body was not found until Sunday morning by Fred Cassibo a cousin of the deceased. The body was found lying between the rails terribly mangled and it is believed that at least three trains passed over the body. It was definitely established that extra freight 3303 killed the man for parts of the body was found on the engine by Engineer Harold Francis of Smiths Falls, when he arrived at Havelock.

Fred Cassibo, the cousin, saw Paul Cassibo on the railway tracks on Saturday night, but was not speaking to him. "The man walked along the tracks," said the witness and sat down some distance from me. He later went into a small dugout on the right of way used by the railway to store tools and I watched him but at no time did I speak to him." What direction the man was walking when hit by the train is a question. The engineer stated he did not feel any jar but that he saw what he thought to be a red collie lying in the tracks.

"A HOUSEHOLD NAME IN 24 COUNTRIES"

It is inevitable in the modern stress and strain of life that you should get run down at this time of year—overtired, nervous, headachey. A long holiday, resting in the sunshine is one way to regain strength. But here is an alternative.

By supplying oxygen to the blood, enriching and nourishing its life-giving cells, Dr. William's Pink Pills actually have the same effect as rest and sunshine. Mrs. Albert Bentley, of Bancroft, Ont., writes:

"Two years ago, I was a complete wreck; in bed for seven months; extremely nervous; had no color. Various medicines helped me very little and I was utterly discouraged when I began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My condition at once improved and today I am well and able for anything without fatigue or trouble."

VICTIM FORMER JUDGE

Windsor, April 17—A man was killed and a woman was seriously injured, as the result of an automobile-street car crash in Sandwich. Arthur W. Dalgleish, Cameron Avenue, the man was driving east on Detroit Street, Sandwich, at 4.25 a.m., when his auto crash ed headon into a street car, on which Frank Gole, Windsor, was the motorman. Dalgleish, said by the police to have been formerly a Judge in Regina, died at the scene of the crash. His passenger, Mrs. Joseph Fisher, was hurled from the car. She is in Grace Hospital with a fractured skull and other injuries.

PERMANENT CONCRETE HIGHWAYS

for Driving Safety

The safe, even surface of concrete lessens driving strain, reduces hazards and provides a notable element of driving comfort.

Most important of all, concrete brings pleasing economies in car running costs through lowered fuel consumption and reduced tire and vehicle depreciation.

Concrete paving is permanent, a source of real satisfaction to the taxpayer. Its first cost is practically its last. Therefore, communities that standardize on concrete are able to devote each year's appropriation almost entirely to new mileage. Advocate concrete paving . . . . insist upon it . . . . at every opportunity.

Two Great Leaders in Two Price Fields...

THROUGHOUT Canada, McLaughlin-Buick continues steadily to out-sell every other fine car... its leadership in sales the natural corollary to that leadership in value which motorists are so quick to appreciate.

And, today, Marquette is being carried on the rising tide of public favour to heights of popularity which bid fair to rival McLaughlin-Buick's own records of success.

The three great series McLaughlin-Buicks with their three wheelbases offer increased safety and comfort, due, in part, to such notable advances as the new double-acting Lovejoy shock absorbers front and rear and the new weatherproof mechanical four wheel brakes. And Marquette is distinguished by performance which is not merely unequalled but definitely unapproached by that of any car in its moderate price class.

See these two great leaders. Drive them. Then, should you wish, make use of the G.M.A.C. deferred payment plan ... designed by General Motors to facilitate your purchase.

EASTER

Tomorrow Easter Sunday brings the return of the day when a new lease of life is felt in man and in nature. Easter falls at an appropriate time of the year and agrees with the mood of man and with the beginning of a new growth in the world about.

Easter is a glad occasion. It comes after winter and follows the Lenten season wherein the stress of life, its trials and tribulations are emphasized. Lent is symbolic of the restraint necessary in life but Easter speaks a message of expansiveness. It is reaction from the Lenten spirit to the joy of a new season wherein growth is expected on every hand.

Religion is naturally at its truest when closest in touch with life. Any religion which is not vitally in contact with the daily existence of mankind misses its goal. Christianity is in accord with facts and science. That explains its power and its efficacy in life. The Easter message is a transcendant message, which takes humanity beyond the border of life and rounds out life here and hereafter.

BANDS

Bands are important to armies and to society for they have a wedding power.

Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School has a band of merit. What it will do to increase the esprit de corps of the students remains to be realized but it is safe prediction that the musicians will be a potent influence.

There is something in band music which inspires to action. The B.C.I.V.S. has shown a laudable amount of enthusiasm and action and the band will not diminish it.

That is why communities need bands. A western town was on the point of losing its band and the citizens rallied to its preservation. In modern warfare developed beyond all size and shape of ancient warfare, bands still remain. They play a part in school and city likewise, for bands are bands of peace as well as of war.

In a day of phonograph and radio music it is well to keep alive the knowledge of music among the people and no better way can be devised than through the school band and the city band.

WILD GEESE

What an appeal the wild life has to man at this season of the year is indicated in the following from the Christian Science Monitor under the title "Voice of the Flock":

"It is not the scream of the dwelling eagles, nor yet of trumpeting swans, that is the freest, bravest note in avian nature. At this time of year we know well what it is. It is the bugling of migrant geese. Peope cry, 'listen, there are geese!' And they run to their door-steps eagerly as of old, to witness the passing of the lifewarfers, distant against cloud-fleece and blue heaven. Whither away? The flock glistens, kindles to the sun, is glimpsed, is lost—is gone. It is an excellent day on which one has seen wild geese. It restores the quite essential communion with a world where visionary tops and horizons are not its boundaries.

"It were idle to deny that the wild goose has achieved a gracious and shining symbolism in the human breath, though our literature has little to say of such a relation. More than that of any other of the great birds, either predatory or game, the significance of the wild goose to us is of boundless unrestricted, nobly-freedom. In passage of the wild geese is swayed with such dignity of flight, upborne on strong and well-nigh tireless pinions, its travels are so far and dustless, its calls so clear and challenging, that few there are who do not stand to gaze after the vanishing flock. Nor do they gaze as hunters will, but as children—children with strange and wordless longings. Wild geese!

"With all the land spread beneath them, as the picture book of a child—town and river, highway and city, seacoast and mountain range—they themselves are sustained and swept onward in an untainted clarity of atmosphere, bound away to the ends of earth. Small wonder that the scope and beauty of the pilgrimage, the freedom of the pilgrims, are fleetingly revealed as they pass. .

"Listen, there are geese! And merchant and clerk will leave their tasks to stand starling, yearning, the plowman will look up from their plows, resting their horses to watch. It is an elder voice, the bugling of the flock, yet it does not grow old—nor shall this ever be, since it is of the nature of timeless things."

ORATORS

Stressing of oratory in the contests which are held at this season of the year cannot fail of good results. The training in preparation for the contests is worth while in itself, the contest opens up vistas of interest in matters which might otherwise attract little attention from youth, and it develops what gifts the student has in oratory.

These contests unite the students of a continent and the entire world in one vast undertaking—a league of oratory, a league of nations of young followers of Demosthenes and Cicero.

Belleville Collegiate and Vocational High School has staged a number of contests and all of these have been of high merit. This year's competition was won by Miss Lorine Adams after a close contest.

The Belleville institution is playing a good part in the world of students.

SIDELIGHTS

EASTER

Sweet thoughts of gladsome Spring
Trilling birds on joyous wing
Peeping plants haste to be seen
All speak of Easter's happy dream.

Glad morn when life asserts its right
To conquer death through Saviour's might
And give to man Eternal hope
Power and grace with sin to cope

Oh blessed day of Nature bright
Enhanced by Thee of Triune Light
Influence our hearts to love Thee best
That we in Thee shall find our rest.

The Sown seed, The quickening Life
And budding flowers but a type
Of Christ's uprising from the dead
As beauteous plants from lowly bed.

In this life we sow the seed
By Christlike acts and gentle deed
We pray an Easter so like Thine
Even at Thy feet in glory Shine.

MEN WILL TAKE THE LIBERTY to tell you how to run a newspaper when they would not think of minding a merchant how to conduct a store or tell the preacher what to preach. They pay money for schools and don't know whether Jimmy is learning the rule of three's, or how to hold a cigarette gracefully, but when it comes to the newspaper there's where they all get off. During the past week a friend wanted to know why we did not try to run the paper a little more along the lines Christ would run a paper. We don't know how that would be. In the first place if Christ were back on earth we don't believe He would go into the newspaper business at all. There is not an editor or preacher that could tell the whole truth for thirty days and stay in the community in which he lived. If our friend doubted this statement let him try telling the absolute truth just one week and see where he lights.—Exchange.

DESERONTO POST MAN is more or less of a nature lover and knows his forest lore like a Hal Bwarts. He also has a vein of caustic humor which never fails to ring the bell. Here's some of Harry's week-end thoughts as expressed in this week's Post:

"The Andies have made Deseronto what it is today. It remains for the Amoses to show how the town can be built up again.

"The pike are up 'the crick" and so is every Deseronto mother's little boy. A great time is being had by everybody.

"Belleville with its cotton-tail rabbits, Trenton with its musk-rats, Campbellford with its coons, the Canadian Soo with its wolves, Toronto with its bulls and bears—can't we dig up something a bit different for Deseronto? The advertising value of these "wild animals," from a tourist's standpoint, is immense.

"A blue-winged teal—built along streamlines of speed and beauty—was feeding back of Foresters' Island the other day and got caught by a foot in a gill net. Clifford Keech happened along, noticed the commotion on the glassy waters and then, as one good sport to another, he released the prisoner. He reports that it lost no time in taking the air."

SUCKERS ARE RUNNING, and fish dinners are in order. Sunfish are also coming out and hundreds can be seen every day and night, meanin', of course, the young fellers who believe that there's no place like home, consequently don't go home until there's no place else to go. Now I believe taking the air is all right after being more or less cooped up all winter, but young people ought to be decorative on the corners when they get smart and make remarks about folks who happen to be passing, particularly young girls. Then there are the smart guys who illuminate their remarks with profanity which is a crime no matter where committed. Pity the youth whose vocabulary is so limited that he has to establish it with curses to try and make folks believe he is as big as his voice is. Then there is another form of nuisance the youthful pool player who makes the air blue with profanity and disgusts everybody within hearing distance. Why this is put up with is beyond me.

A TORRENT OF POWER AND SPEED

72 MILES AN HOUR
4B IN SECOND GEAR
65 HORSEPOWER
RICH BROADCLOTH UPHOLSTERY
INTERNAL 4 WHEEL BRAKES
HYDRAULIC SHOCK ABSORBERS

SINCE its recent brilliant debut the new Willys Six has gained widespread recognition with performance achievements far above any expectations. More speed than one would ever care to use—traffic agility beyond belief—a sublime contempt for hills and rough-cast roads . . . these completely justify its claim to being the year's outstanding performer at its price.

With its 65 horsepower motor the Willys Six easily attains 72 miles an hour in high and 48 in second. Rubber insulation makes vibration hardly perceptible.

Other reasons for Willys Six supremacy are its four hydraulic shock absorbers, full force-feed lubrication, exceptional fuel economy and the uncramped comfort of its roomy body. Security is added by powerful internal four-wheel brakes which decrease speed slowly or with a militant snap.

When you inspect this impressive car you will be won by its appearance as much as its performance. Radiator, fenders, body contours and panelling reflect smartness and distinction. The rich upholstery fabrics, silver-finished hardware and fine interior appointments add a note of luxury in keeping with its striking outward beauty.

Urge Uncle Sam to Commence Disarmament

Pacifists Claim U. S. Constitution In Conflict With Pact

(Special to the Ontario Intelligencer Copyright 1930)

Washington, D. C., April 19—Militant pacifism is on the warpath these days in a fight to promote peace. Demanding the total and immediate disarmament of the United States, regardless of what other nations may do it may not do, and insisting that war for any purpose is wrong in principle, out of date, and no longer to be tolerated by intelligent, responsible citizens, speakers representing a dozen or more peace societies have put forth their case before a sub-committee of the Senate's judiciary committee, consisting of Senators Gillett, Dineen and Dill.

The deputation urged immediate action on a proposed amendment to the constitution which would make war legally impossible for the United States.

The amendment reads: "War for any purpose shall be illegal and neither the United States nor any state, territory, possession, or person subject to its jurisdiction shall prepare for, declare, engage in, or carry on war or any armed conflict, expedition, invasion, or undertaking within or without the United States, nor shall any funds be raised, appropriated, or expended for such purpose."

Marshalling the peace forces was Miss Elinor Byrns, a New York lawyer, who said:

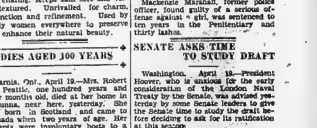
"The United States has joined with other nations in the general pact to renounce war but it has neither outlawed nor renounced war. It has not renounced even offensive war. The constitution still empowers the government to prepare for, declare and carry on war. The pact renounces but the constitution permits. The enactment of this amendment will mean that we intend to hold the sacred oath will no longer make human sacrifice to the myth of self-defence. It will mean that we have substituted non-resistance or non-violent resistance for armed resistance because we know that violence and blood shed are always wrong in principle, disastrous in practice."

Some of the statements made by speakers were:

"The practical way to disarm is for each country to disarm, independently of the action of any other country."

"Ask any of your foreign missionary boards who is the safer amongst barbarous peoples, an armed or an unarmed missionary, and they will all tell you the latter."

"The real way to end war is to end preparedness. Without an army and a navy there can be no war. Security comes as the result of peaceful intentions. Terror is induced by armaments."



Mary Winsor applauded the amendment as a means of disarming the United States not only in relation to foreign foes but also civilian authorities and private individuals. "We who advocate total disarming," said Miss Winsor, "take our stand on this moral principle regardless of consequences."

TROOPS MAY BE MOVED TO INDIA

Forces Available, Including Reservists, Total 270,000

London, April 19.—The British press print a lengthy synopsis of the troubles in India, the seriousness of which is reflected by the growing length of despatches dealing with the riots and with Gandhi's activities in great detail. No official comment is available as to the seriousness of the situation or the possibilities of grave disorders.

It is learned, however, that quiet measures are being taken here to move troops in the event of serious blood-shed, and the opinion prevails in Parliamentary lobbies that anything approaching mutiny in India would be a signal for the prompt downfall of the Labor Government.

There are at present one British cavalry regiment and 26 white British infantry battalions in India, about 25,000 men in all, detailed in the "Army for the maintenance of internal security."

This does not include the troops in the "striking forces" which remain with the "covering force" guards the northern frontier. In the event of internal trouble troops could not be moved from the frontier except in the last emergency because of exposure to attacks from tribesmen and perhaps Afghans.

In addition to the white troops the army for the maintenance of internal security contains 38 squadrons of Indian troops, including reservists and auxiliaries white and colored, there are 270,000 troops in India, one soldier for every 1,300 inhabitants.

EXPEDITION TO ARCTIC CIRCLE BY DOMINION GOVT. EXPLORERS MAY SOLVE FRANKLIN MYSTERY

Hon. Charles Stewart Discloses Many Trips Planned to Yukon and N.W.T.

By Wilfred Eggleston.
(Special to the Ontario Intelligencer, Copyright, 1930)

Ottawa, April 19—Diverse enterprises and adventure in the land of the Eskimo and the blue goose is heralded in the summer program of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Branch, Department of the Interior, made public today by Hon. Charles Stewart. It breathes of hardy and colorful action in the land that lies between latitude 60 and the North Pole, and involves such varied projects as reindeer ranching, treasure hunting among Arctic rocks, preservation of some precious herds of muskoxen, and a fascinating sidetrip into the Sir John Franklin country, which, in the light of information recently acquired by the Department, may at last put to rest its grim secret in full.

Though the most spectacular event of the year, the annual expedition of the "Beothic" into northern waters, in which she goes further north than any other steel-clad ship has ever gone, will not begin until about August 1st, the important activities of the Department are already under way. Scientific investigators are making their way to the distant scenes of their field labors, activity while one of the projects, the reindeer trek from Alaska to the Mackenzie delta is partly accomplished.

On July 1st the Coppermine area, which for twelve years has been set aside as a game reserve, will be opened again for private location of claims. Discoveries of large slabs of native copper have excited the curiosity of prospectors for many years, and some adventurous spirits even have ventured to the possible range of discoveries. In the meantime there is a call of private enterprise in the country when the claims have been staked. Mr. T. Burwash is now on his way to super vise the mining operations in the interests of the government and the natives of that region.

Not the least of the Beothic's cares lies King William Island, near which Sir John Franklin perished in 1847. Astounding though it seems, that island and the mainland west of it will be man in the months of the weeks of the year when it is free from snow, and when relics of members of that ill-fated expedition might be picked up.

There is even a legend, which may be nothing more, that Sir John Franklin is buried on the island of Cape King William is'and. This is to be investigated by Major Burwash, if he can arrange to get across during the brief snowless season. This hardy explorer is satisfied that the Franklin records were deposited either in a cairn or other landmark, and that the story of the fate of these 129 men will some day be told.

Mr. R. H. Moore has been given the task of making the Thelon Sanctuary a game preserve in fact as well as in name. The area of 13,000 square miles pushes up into the barrens to an oasis of timber and game, and it harbors at present the only herds of muskoxen of any importance on the North American continent. These animals, as explained by O. S. Finnie, director of the branch, do not wander like the caribou, and their method of defense, attack, that of gathering in a herd, and forming the animals in a sort of hollow square, makes them easy marks for the hunter. If slaughter of them continues, they will soon cease to be extinct. Their preservation has practically no scientific importance, since they make the Thelon Game Sanctuary the only place where the lost aviator or prospector might be able to survive indefinitely until able to get out to civilization.

The Fur Sanctuary can only be entered along the main river, and at each entrance to the preserve a log cabin is to be built, and a warden stationed. This is to be Mr. Moore's work this coming summer and winter, carried by the warden already resident there.

"There is no mineral on the sanctuary, and on one has any business there. The warden will be in a position to accost anyone entering up or down the river, and ask his, "what his business is there," explained Mr. Finnie.

J. Dewey Soper, who ended a lengthen scientific wild goose chase last year by revealing the breeding grounds of the blue goose, is going back into the country where he spent many months in 1928 and 1929; this time on a semi-permanent basis. He will go with his wife and child on the "Beothic" this summer, and a house is being built for them at Lake Harbor by the Department. He will then continue his studies of bird and animal life in Baffin Island and will do some mapping along the west coast, which is still in unknown land for the geographer. It will probably be two or three years before he returns to civilization.

The slow trek of 3,000 reindeer from Nome, Alaska, to the Mackenzie delta occupie stne attention of the two Fernald brothers, and they will be engaged in this project till the spring of 1931. A. E. Fernald went to Nome last autumn and supervised the selection of the 3,000 animals purchased from Nomen Brothers there. This spring his brother journeyed up the Mackenzie River with the air mail and as soon as spring permits he will supervise the building of corrals and other preparations for the reception of the animals.

The "Beothic" will take up to Chesterfield Inlet a doctor, who has still to be chosen by the Civil Service Commission. His attention will bring the medical staff of the Branch to eight, stationed at strategic points in the North West Territories.

Mr. Finnie's report, covering the next two years, which will bear, two years later a total of more than 4000 tons. Silkworms, already an important industry in Bao Paulo, will be another activity of the Japanese, as well as the production of two kinds of Brazil nuts. The companying plans to market the crops of its colonists, retaining 30 per cent as its commission.

Rev. Charles A. Brickenstab, missionary of the United Church of Canada at Powchow, China, and one of the 150 United Church workers now in West China, is reported captured by Chinese brigands. He went to China from Orillia, Ontario, in 1913.

MACKEREL ARE NOW IN SEASON

Fleet Ready to Sail for Grounds Off Virginia Capes

Gloucester, Mass., April 17. — The mackerel season is on. The big event in the Gloucester fishermen's calendar occurred on March 31, when the schooners Gen. Capt. John Dahlmer and the Josephine and Mary, Captain John Pallazola, sailed from this port for the Southern fishing grounds.

Mackerel means much to Gloucester. The success of this branch of industry in the past decade has been far beyond any record for a similar time in the history of the business. Mackerel is the quick money fish, and to all those concerned, from owners to hands alike, to those who go down to the sea, haul the trawl and purse the seine, the necessity of keeping up the record of the past years is clearly understood.

The departure of the advance guard was originally scheduled for April 2, but Captain Pallazola's assembly of former years, and Capt. Pallazola, who captured first honors last year by a large margin, stocking 450,000, have been keeping a close watch on this matter, and by the prospect for the premiership this year is going to delving into a real battle.

The rest of the seining fleet, which as in other years, will number about 50 sail, is in no hurry to get away, and will depart about April 12. After that fishing, and it continues on the rest of the month. About three quarters of the seiners catch is made at night by electrified lights.

The first objective of the fleet is stream 250 Capes of Virginia in about 25 to 32 fathoms of water, in which line the mackerel school, bound north and south, through the Cape Cod Canal, invariably move. Captains Manuel and Dahlmar may go further south to Body Island, where the fish are first met after they round Hatteras.

Along toward the last of April about the 20th, boats will get away from this port for Hatteras to meet the fish when they are well up the Jersey coast. Each year two or three of the seining fleet halt from Gloucester, which has a well-established branch of the fishery, the natives are recruited anywhere from Jersey to England. This port furnishes about two thurds of the number. The boats carry from four to six men. In many instances the masters are the owners.

The southern fishery usually ends about June 15 when the scene of operations shift to the Cape shore for the summer season and to South Channel as the prospects indicate.

Room Is Found For Japanese

Nipponese Gets 2,500,000 Acres as Basis for Vast Colony

Rio de Janeiro.—Hachiro Fukuhara, organizer and manager of Companhia Nipponica e Plantaceos do Brasil, has a vision—that of a great colony of Japanese in this state growing cotton, cacao, rice and other products on farms of 60 acres each.

One hundred and fifty families are being brought yearly from the crowded islands of Nippon to the virgin forests of this state and started on an independent life, Fukuhara in November, 1928, secured a concession here of 2,500,000 acres in five different parcels.

One is of slightly more than 1,000,000 acres, another 1,000,000 and three smaller tracts are of 200,000 acres each. Only the first two have been definitely located; the others are to be located within two years on unoccupied lands in the regions specified in the concession, which, in general terms, is similar to that granted Henry Ford for his rubber plantation.

The company is using local labor as well as Japanese in the development of its property, and three Brazilians, an engineer, a banker and an attorney, have financial interests in the company. The first Japanese were brought from a large colony in the State of Sao Paulo, but now they are coming regularly from Japan by direct steamer via South Africa.

At Acara, where the first development is going on, there is an experimental farm, and here the new settlers buy their land, paying a percentage down and the remainder over a period of years. Cotton is envisaged as the principal crop at Monte Alegre, while at Acara rice and cacao are the principal crops.

The centre of the Japanese company's activities is at Thomeasutu, 12 hours by launch south of this city on the Acara River. To this point the river is navigable for vessels up to 500 tons.

Fukuhara believes that cacao is the most promising crop, and hopes that 2,000,000 trees will be planted within

TODAY more than ever before Oldsmobile exemplifies the principle of balanced engineering which is responsible for its eager responsiveness—its remarkable flexibility. Engine, chassis and body are designed, not only as units of individual excellence, but as parts of a perfectly harmonized whole. This studied balance explains why the Oldsmobile Six does all things well.

Take, for example, the engine. Its principles of design . . incorporated only after they had been thoroughly tried and proved . . are unchanged in the new Oldsmobile . . except for progressive engineering advancements which add greatly to motoring pleasure, confidence and satisfaction.

The rugged chassis, with its low centre of gravity, achieves exceptional roadability . . the tapered frame permits a short turning circle of only 39 feet . . long flexible springs controlled by Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers, front and rear, assure restful riding ease . . enclosed 4-wheel brakes promote safety.

While Oldsmobile has retained its characteristic lines, it now presents longer, lower and roomier bodies, finished in beautiful new color combinations. See the latest models at our showrooms. Drive an Oldsmobile yourself, for there is no better way of demonstrating its performance . . comparing its value. Ask about the G.M.A.C. plan of deferred payments.

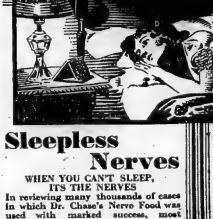
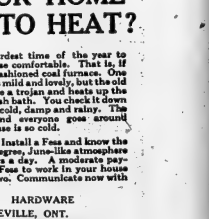
SOCIETY FOLK ARE VICTIMS JAKE FOOT



Wichita, Kan., April 17.—A huge city hospital, large enough to hold 1,000 cots and offering free hospitalization to "jake footers" as Wichita has come to know Jamaica ginger paralysis victims, may be established here a reminder of war days when giant hospitals were built to care for injured and sick.



City officials, who have labored with the malady for more than a month, reported county and city poor farms were crowded to overflowing with "jake foot" victims. The majority are confined to their beds and are unable to walk. Extra nurses are needed to care for them.

A census of victims made by authorities showed they were caring for near ly 200 victims and then conservatively estimated the total ill at more than 500.

Others acquainted with the disease and its prevalence here estimated the total near the 1,000 mark or more.

Motor Crash In Marmora Road
Nice Family Will Hold Reunion at Stirling August 6th
Stirling, April 19 - (By Mail)—The funeral of the late Mr. George Hagerman was held on Monday afternoon, April 14th. A short service was held in the home and later the full service was held in St. Paul's Church, his pastor, Rev. E. W. Rowland gave the address based on Elijah being translated to heaven by a whirlwind and Elisha's petition that a double portion of Elijah's spirit be upon him. Mr. Rowland spoke of the deeply Christian spirit of the deceased and the prayer that his spirit could descend upon those who remained to mourn his loss. Rev. F. J. Johlin prayed and gave out the hymns. Mrs. J. Butler sang very feelingly the "Old Rugged Cross," Hymns "Asleep in Jesus" and "Servant of God, well done." "Thy Glorious Warfare's past," "The battle's fought, the fight is won," and "Thou are crowned at Last," were sung by the congregation.

A son and a daughter were unable to be present at the funeral. Those present being Mrs. Fred Hall, Mrs. Geo. White, Mrs. Lindsay Watson, daughters and Mr. Wm. Meagheon, Howard Ashley, L. McKeldohn, and H. Potter. Messrs. Ernest Carlisle and C. F. Linn acted as ushers. The floral tributes were very choice. It was a very large funeral testifying to the respect for the departed one.

A collision took place on the Marmora Road near the fourth concession of Rawdon between Mr. David Cotton of Springbrook and Mr. Clayton Tucker on Saturday evening. Mr. Cotton was proceeding north, the impact was such as to do considerable damage to Mr. Cotton's car and to injure Mrs. Cotton badly enough to necessitate several stitches being taken in her shoulder the other occupants of the cars escaped injury miraculously.

St. Andrew's Guild met on Monday evening, April 14th with a good attendance.

Mrs. A. B. Murdoff acted as leader and read the Scripture lesson, found in Matt. 16th Chapter, followed by the Lord's prayer, after the minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted Mrs Rosa 6gy was appointed a delegate to a Missionary Convention to be held in June. Rev. A. N. Reid then took the topic on the life of Christ, from the cradle to the grave which was most appropriate for the Easter season. After another hymn the meeting was closed by repeating the Mizpah Benediction.

Miss Freda Matthews is home for her Easter vacation. Friends congratulate her on obtaining a scholarship in Knox College studies as a Deaconess-in-training.

Miss Agnes Stout has gone back to Peterboro to resume her teaching duties.

Rev. Nicholas Stout of Bancroft has returned to his home accompanied by his father, Mr. James Stout.

To Memorialize "Hail Columbia"
Philadelphia, April 19—"Hail Columbia," which frequently has shared honors with the "Star-Spangled Banner" and "America" as a national anthem, is to be memorialized in a bronze tablet which will be fastened to the modest little house, 338 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, where the song was written 132 years ago. The Historical Society of Pennsylvanian will hold ceremonies at the house on April 22.

Joseph Hopkinson, who wrote the song lived there when Philadelphia was both the national capital and the metropolis, and for 16 years "Hail Columbia" was regarded as the national song of the American colonies, which so lately had established the son of Francis Hopkinson, author, statesman and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

According to data in the hands of the historical society, Gilbert Fox, a singer at one of the Philadelphia theatres, went to the Hopkinson home on April 22, 1798, and tried, without young Hopkinson's help to put words to a song called "The President's March," said to be an arrangement of an old German folk song, but the singer was unable to find words that would adequately express national feeling. Hopkinson and his wife composed a song aid Mrs. Hopkinson played it on the clavichord. Fox sang the song, advertising it as the "new federal song," and it quickly gained instant popularity. It was not given the name of "Hail Columbia," however, until first sung in a New York theatre.

CONQUERED BY A SONG

Lands have been annexed by fire and sword, but the west coast of Vancouver Island has the unique distinction of being won by a song. The Spanish admiral who led an expedition against it in 1790, so charmed the heart of the warlike Maquinna, Lord of the Nootkas, with a three song which he caused his merry men to sing, over and over until the chief was placated, that the Indian made him welcome and gave him jurisdiction over the Sound and the Islands. Since that date the coast of Vancouver Island has become the rendezvous of tourists from all over the world. Within easy reach of Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle, it yet offers the attraction of territory quite unspoilt by industrialism and a touch of beautiful scenery and fruitful space, as it was when the Spaniards first sighted it, as it virtually is today. Canadian Pacific steamships of the British Columbia Coast Service travel up and down this coast, and make it easily and comfortably accessible to visitors. Lay-out shows Canadian Pacific coastal vessel "Princess Norah" sailing among the islands off the Vancouver Island coast; lower left, Indian parade in village and totem pole with Lord and Lady Willingdon and Captain Jack, Indian Nootka Chief.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHL

But she shredded me, afterwards. Now and then she scrubbed up her blue eyes and laughed into Christopher Stayner's own as at some secret joke. For the rest she was dignified, interested, protesting only by an occasional glance.

"If it's worth it to you—" she would say with a shrug, when the wrap and evening gown were followed by pearl banded slippers, transparent blue silk stockings as thin as fog, a white silk morning gown, smart and brief, like a female frock, with a knee-length Ritz striped silk jacket to accompany it.

"It is worth it to me." Chris always answered, with a businesslike nod.

He was very businesslike today. This was Thursday afternoon, and he had settled frankly that he had evaded a telephone with the Russian countess and her daughter. They had reached town at nine o'clock, and had been in touch with him at twenty minutes past nine," he said.

"I sent them flowers, you see. And Rountree asked them to dinner tomorrow night, and I'm going to spring you on them then."

He glanced at her sharply.

"You're not nervous about it, are you?"

"Not exactly, no. But to tell you the truth," Mary Kent said with an uneasy laugh, "I'll be glad when it is over."

"Maybe you think I won't?" he said fervently.

They both laughed, more naturally.

"Do you know anything about bridge?" Chris asked, as they left the shop, and found themselves in the late afternoon tide on Post Street.

"Oh yes, I play."

"Not contract?" he asked incredulously.

"Oh yes!"

"You're perfect," he assured her. "Now, let me see where we could go to have a cup of tea—" he said, pondering). "The Palace? It's quiet there. Do you like the Palace?"

"I've never been there for tea." "Well, come on then. Because it seems to me we ought to rehearse a little. You see we can't slip up on this, Mary," he said. Because the minute they suspect any hokum, it gives 'em a sort of claim, do you see?"

He noted her heightened color, the dimple at the corner of her mouth.

"Mind my calling you that?"

"Ah, no! Heavens, I expect you to. Only—only when I'm doing rather mean things to me," the girl confessed.

Stayner made no immediate answer. He was leading the way into the Palace Hotel, down the long passage with smart little flower and candy cigarette and magazine shops, into the wide airy court where tea were scattered. An orchestra played.

"We want a corner table," he said to talk," he said, with an air, to the head waiter, they were established, his back to the room, Mary Kent facing it, with a view of the drifting crowds themselves almost there? But my young man's unseen.

"You say that what you are doing rather scares you," Christopher Stayner said, as calmly as if they had been no interruption, when they had ordered their tea. "Now why do you say that? What is there about it to scare you?"

TELEPHONE SERVICE

Judging, from the contents of the annual report recently issued, the 1929 Telephone Company of Canada has just completed another year of even greater service to the province through which its system extends and has visibly improved the efficiency with which its services are conducted.

Possessing virtually a monopoly of the telephone field in the urban centres of Ontario and Quebec, the company might, if it chose, rest upon its laurels and let the public be content with the service already provided. But there is no evidence of this in the programme which it is following and which has as its object the constant improvement of its facilities to the end that even greater satisfaction may be given telephone users.

Thus, the report records the fact that during the year 1929 extensive research work has been done to ascertain the causes of unsatisfactory local calls. As a result of these activities, and notwithstanding an increase in the calling rate, the percentage of completed local calls increased from 79.4 to 81, amounting to a total of 30,000 more completed calls per day than in the year 1928.

In addition, an increase of over 11 per cent. in the volume of completed toll business was experienced in the year and in all respects, so the report states, toll service was improved. The average length of time for handling toll calls was reduced to 1.8 minutes. Improved operating methods were put in force and the proportion of toll calls handled while the customer remained at the telephone was increased to 83 per cent.

A further reduction of 12 per cent. in the number of troubles per telephone has been attained. Since 1926 the reduction has been 43 per cent., thus demonstrating that the company's efforts in the direction of preventive maintenance have been effective.

The installation of telephones is being completed on an average in 2.2 days. Fifty per cent. of the installations were made on appointment with the applicant to do the work on his premises at a specified time.

Wife as Rescuer Becomes Accuser

Eighteen Years of Domestic Happiness Shattered by Irate Hubby

Sarnia, April 17.—How a wife saved her husband from the gallows 18 years ago, only to bring him back to law, was related in police court here when Stephen Kyoshk, Walpole Island Indian, faced a charge of assaulting his wife by pointing a gun at her.

On January 1, 1912, Adam John and Charles Nahdee, two residents of the reserve were slain after a New Year's party, and Stephen Kyoshk was convicted and sentenced to death.

The prosecution dale was set for June 6 but Kyoshk was granted a new trial and when the case again came up the crown withdrew the charge. Flossie Williams, another resident of the island and fiancee of the accused, was the key witness for the defence and it was largely on the strength of her statements that the prisoner was freed.

Kyoshk after his release married the smiling Indian girl and for almost 18 years the domestic harmony of the Kyoshk house was undisturbed. Recently, however, Mrs. Kyoshk made complaint before the County court authorities that her husband had threatened to shoot her and Kyoshk was arraigned before Magistrate C. S. Woodrow in county police court charged with common assault.

The court granted a request for adjournment until Wednesday so that he could obtain additional witnesses for his defence.

30,000 Take Jobs as Navigation Opens

THOUSANDS OF MEN RUSH BACK TO WORK AS NAVIGATION OPENS
2000 LIGHTHOUSE MEN AT POSTS

Crews Fitting Out, All Classes Engaged Are Busily Engaged

AMONG SHOREMEN

Hundreds of Stevedores Back at Work After Winter of Rest

TORONTO, April 21.—(CP)—With whistles screeching and flags flying, vessels on seventeen hundred miles of the Great Lakes today welcomed the 1930 navigation season, and thousands of unemployed are flocking to lake ports in readiness to seek in unloading first cargoes.

Economically the opening of navigation each year is greatly welcomed by those unfortunates who have struggled all through the winter months. The fall layoff throws approximately thirty thousand men out of work, and, when it happens that the summer season has been a slow one, as was the case last year, that number is swelled by five thousand more. Usually, however, the first week or two is the busiest, as the men who have been laid off by the various companies during the winter months are rehired.

Today, those things are practically forgotten. Two thousand lighthouse-keepers have gone to their posts, duties which did not leave their moorings today at least have crews fitted out. Engineers, firemen, deck and cook passers, captains, mates, wheelsmen, watchmen, have all returned to their jobs. The average crew carried aboard a freighter numbers 22. Aboard the larger passenger steamers the number may reach a hundred or more. Ashore, too, the effect of the opening of navigation was felt. In freight sheds, hundreds of stevedores are employed. At the coal docks adjacent to other mooring places the opening brings employment to thousands directly or indirectly. Some of this labor is transient, shipping enough. But most of it is steady as the vessels in navigation permit. With the larger transfer points, for instance there are hand trackers, who each summer work day and night to collect a "stake" large enough to support them through the coming winter. In the fall there's rambling stevedores head for the lake cities, where they live in comparative ease through the winter months. If the spring, they head back to the east. And it is quite likely that how many of these "regulars" are well educated men who seem better suited for a different occupation than pushing a hand truck in a freight shed.

LINDSAY TO WHITBY SERVICE GOING

Lindsay, April 21 (C.P.).—Another development in truck and bus service is seen in the announcement of the C.N.R. that the passenger train service between Lindsay and Whitby is to be curtailed. This line service will finally built and operated as a private concern, Lindsay, Reach, Pickering and Whitby Railroad. Projects have been launched by Whitby and Port Perry in which Lindsay will likely join but the C.N.R. officials claim that the service does not pay and the trains must be discontinued.

TALK ELECTION IN SEPTEMBER

Ottawa, April 21.—Premier Mackenzie King will return to the Capital on Thursday of this week, after attending the Easter recess in Bermuda with Senator Lawrence Harmon and Wilfrid Laurier McDougall. He will be relieved by a dozen or more of his colleagues, who will take advantage of the respite from Parliamentary duties to visit their constituencies or to spend a few days at the seaside.

Toward the end of the week a meeting of the Cabinet will be held, and Hon. Charles A. Dunning will submit to Council the Budget, whose preparation he has completed during the Easter holidays. That it will be an election Budget there is no room for doubt. All signs point to the dissolution of Parliament about the end of June and a general election campaign in July and August, with polling day during the last week of August or early September.

The Government is clearing the decks for action, and the outstanding issue, it is believed, will be the fiscal proposals of the Minister of Finance. The Ministry will seek a mandate to represent Canada at the Empire Economic Conference and the Imperial Conference which are to be held simultaneously in London, commencing on September 30.

May Blast to Recover Body

Wait Permission From Local Inspector of Game

Permission has been received from Conservation Warden Percy Fox and William Lynch ,to proceed with blasting on the west side of Victoria Park, in the hope of recovering the body of seven-year-old Jack Savage, who was drowned while playing at this point on March the tenth of this year. The permission of District Inspector Mr. Lyons has not yet been secured, as he is at present out of the city, but Chief Lynch stated this morning that this would be secured within the next day or so. Mr. Lyons, assisted by Chief Lynch and a number of the firemen will supervise the work. The public works department of the city will not be blasting, and it is hoped that the young boy's body will be recovered by this means. The department have come to the conclusion after weeks of ineffectual efforts that the body fell in freight sheds, hundreds of steel doors are employed. At the coal docks adjacent to other mooring places the opening brings employment to thousands directly or indirectly. Some of this labor is transient, shipping enough. But most of it is steady as the vessels in navigation permit. With the larger transfer points, for instance there are hand trackers, who each summer work day and night to collect a "stake" large enough to support them through the coming winter. PLAYLET PRESENTED

A most interesting playlet, "The Wrong Will," was presented by the Young Peoples' Dramatic Society of Carmel in the Presbyterian church at Pinkney on Tuesday night of this week. There was an excellent attendance and approximately $50.00 was realized for local charities.

A LOCAL STORY

There is a certain column in a well known Toronto newspaper known as the "Pick and Shovel" column, written and edited by Lou Marsh who is surely no stranger to Belleville and Mr. Marsh makes a habit of collecting good human stories and reproducing them in the "Star". Having run out of material he sensed sundry calls for help and jokes began to pour in on him from every point in the compass. Riddle Thomas, of Bellville, contributed one —and a good one—but Marsh cannot call last night in the "Pick and Shovel" and ask him to "Get" the joke. We think Eddie must have been grievously wronged and his joke mixed up with the wrong material.

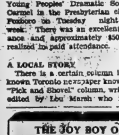
MORE CHARGES IN WELLS CASE

Two more charges were laid against Edward Wells, coal merchant of the city, when he appeared in police court Thursday, Mr. C. A. Cameron acting for Wells was unaware of these charges and asked for a further remand. The case set for the hearing was Wednesday next. Two charges of not weighing coal over the market and one of two charges "that he did on April 8th make a false document to wit a market weight slip No 31725, knowing it to be false with intent that it be acted upon as genuine to the prejudice of S. W. Reid contrary to Sec. 466 of the criminal code. The other charge was for No. N2277.

WAS CAPTAIN WILLARD

It was stated in Saturday's issue that Capt. Kennedy was in charge of the Coalfax which reached Canada Cement docks with a load of coal on Friday. This should have read Capt. Chas. Willard. The Coalfax opened the local navigation season.

BACK TO SCHOOL AGAIN



Students at Albert College will resume their studies on Wednesday following their Easter recess. Many of the boys went home for the vacation while others residing at distant points celebrated the holidays with friends.

A NARROW ESCAPE

A number of motorists had a narrow escape when a car driven by Harry Phillips of Bethel, left the road at O'Brien's Bridge, in Thurlow Township on Saturday night. In some unaccountable manner the auto left the road, dropping over a twenty foot embankment. The occupants received a few scratches and a bad shaking up. The car had not been removed today.

CARS CROWD ROADS

Citizens thronged all highways and sideroads on Good Friday in this section.

Memorial Arch To Be Discussed

Mayor Reid Calls Public Meeting at City Hall on Tuesday

Citizens are requested to attend the public meeting called by Mayor Reid tomorrow night in the City Hall for an open discussion on the feasibility of putting a memorial arch on the new bridge that is to be constructed across the Moira River at Bridge St. Some of the city council members do not feel as if they should take full responsibility for the placing of an arch on the bridge, while others are of the opinion it would be a splendid place for a memorial tablet. Some fine sketches have been drawn and will be produced at the meeting, showing different designs of arches. These are many members of the council decided to the idea that another architect should have anything to do with the design other than the consulting engineer that has been employed by the city. Mr. Arnold B. Crandall has tendered a design for bronze plaques to be placed in the centre of the bridge, one on each side, and to contain the names of those who paid the supreme sacrifice. However the meeting on Tuesday night is for the citizens and a full discussion of the question is requested before any action will be taken inside matter.

Steel's Staff Honor Member

Miss Dorothy Salisbury Is Presented With Writing Set

On Thursday night, Mr. F. D. Farrell, manager of Steel's Store, and Mrs. Farrell entertained the members of the staff at a party at their home, 46 Queen street. About twenty guests were present and a delightful evening was spent in cards, music and dancing.

A feature of the evening's programme was the presentation of a beautiful gold pencil set to Miss Dorothy Salisbury, who resigned from the store, of which she has been a valued member, since the opening of the Steel-Brock store in Belleville. Miss Salisbury today entered the training school for nurses of Hotel Dieu Hospital, Kingston. The presentation on behalf of the staff, was made by the assistant manager, L. A. Marsh, and the following address was read:

"Miss Salisbury—

On behalf of Mr. Farrell and the staff I have been asked to perform a duty tonight which I feel is the most quite capable of doing. However, we have learned that in the near future you are going to leave us and enter upon new duties and we all know if you prove yourself as capable in the new undertaking as you have while in the employ of Steel Brock we feel you will make a nurse excelled by none.

"To show our appreciation and esteem, we ask you to accept this token with our best wishes.

(Signed) F. D. Farrell, manager; L. Marshall, assistant manager; Helen McMahon, Marion Murphy, Marguerite Doolittle, Miss Ivy Ricketts, Mrs. E. Bennett, Irene Wilson, Dorothy Pascoe, Beatrice Moynes, Hilda Wenham, Frances Scott.

Spratt, D.D. coadjutor archbishop of the diocese of Kingston, who will confer the Sacrament of Confirmation on over 500 candidates in the parish. Tug Concretia Opens Season

Government Vessel Leaves For Prescott For Overhauling

TRENTON, Ont., April 21.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—So far little activity has been seen from the sailor's standpoint in this town, but it is expected that this week things will open up. The government tug "Concretia" has left the dock at Twelve O'Clock Point where she wintered after being caught in the ice during the early freeze-up last fall, and has made her way to Prescott for the annual overhauling. Another tug will pick up the few buoys left by the "Concretia" and replace them for the coming season.

The freighter Matt Sickers, owned by Mr. Robert Weddell of Trenton, is still in the same position as when it was caught in the freeze-up early last fall. It is understood that the ship has sprung a bad leak, and may be a dead loss No attempt has been made to float the ship yet this spring.

Special Easter Church Services

TRENTON, Ont., April 21.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Special Easter Sunday services featured in all Trenton churches yesterday, with music befitting the occasion being prepared and well executed by the various choirs. At St. George's Anglican the Holy Communion was celebrated in the morning, and "Christ is Risen" was the anthem.

At King Street United Church the morning music was exceptionally good, the soloists, Miss Forth into Joy, (Sempre), a quartette, "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me" and a solo with chorus, "See now the Lamb" (Faure) being the high lights. A baptismal and reception service was held in the morning at Grace United Church, at which service the Sunday School attended in a body. "Hallelujah" was the morning anthem, while a duet was sung by Mrs. Sager and Mr. Avery, and a solo by Mrs. Frank Sager.

PLANE IN FOG STRIKES WIRE

Four Killed Late Friday On Outskirts of Jersey City

JERMET CITY, N.J., April 19 —Lost and helpless in a woolly fog that enveloped the entire New York metropolitan area, a Colonial Airways airplane crashed with its pilot and three passengers on the outskirts of Jersey City late Friday. All aboard were killed. Four dead.

Count de la Vaulx, of Paris, France, president of the B.A.I. or International Aeronautical Federation.

Mrs. Marie Williams, of Providence, R.I.

A. E. Conklin, Albany, N.Y.

John Salway, 37, pilot of Albany, native of Canada and Ridley College old boy.

The plane had left Montreal at noon and had hailed at Albany.

Count de la Vaulx, one of France's most distinguished citizens, had changed his name from Jehl (of) early dress with the red sash of the Legion of Honor across his shirt bosom preparing to attend a banquet in New York City.

He was conducting a triumphant air tour of South and North America, during which he touched almost every capital in the western hemisphere.

After his arrival from Mexico at Key Antonia, Tex., March 29, he went to Washington, where the French ambassador presented him to President Hoover on April 11th.

Count de la Vaulx started his air tour from Rio de Janeiro February 22. He was surveying air routes, with a view to the extension of French air service.

The airplane, on its last descent, crashed into a high tension wire resulting in a one-story powerhouse on the Links of the Hackensack River. Lights all over Hudson County went out. As the plane struck the ground it burst into flames and was destroyed.

DOUBT NEW PLANET

Paris, April 19—The newly discovered trans-Neptunian planet may be only a comet, according to M. Esclangon, director of the Paris observatory. His doubts are shared by his predecessor, Henri Deslandres, who has sent a communication to the Academy of Sciences on this subject.

M. Esclangon has observed that the movements of the new planets—or comets—are extremely slow. His colleague, astronomer, M. Stoiko, estimates its distance from the sun at 44 astronomical units and its inclination at 38 degrees.

GIRL UNAFRAID
BY
Gladys Johnson

"You modern girls beat the Dutch! Here I sit, waiting like old faithful Dobbin, to give you my weekly doubt, from a person whenever you give the word, and the most I can get to be is the best partner in a business deal."

Well, I would be thankful that I leave you a little money and a little liberty instead of kissing all of both!

Then opening his hand reluctantly, "You're the doctor. Whatever you say goes. But if you want to increase my prescription—"

She laughed with determined gaiety and waved him a flippant good-bye as he ran up the steps. But her heart was sore with pity. Why was life like this? They must own hurt another unwillingly. First, Neil. Now this good fellow . . . hurting him as Ken has hurt her.

In the mirror of her dresser she saw the change Tom had noticed in the restaurant. Warm interest in her eyes, heightened color on her face.

She had come face to face with a girl who had left the Harrison flat and taken this small room. The interest in Tom had given her poise. Reading, studying, suffering—they had put depth behind what had been the glowing beauty of youth.

She was in a fever of anxiety to speak to Jeanette about the shop the next day. But dreaded the call coming down all morning. It was not until Ardeth returned from her own luncheon that she heard Jeanette's resonant voice coming from the lunchette.

Estelle was furious when she learned about it and they had another jolly row. Poor Ken, his life is one row after another, taking every advantage of her condition to air her nasty temper whenever he chose.

"What did Ken say?" That was Phyllis Hawkins's contribution, with curiosity.

Jeanette's reason was that he was sick of living on Parker money. He'd just reached the breaking point and decided to cut loose from Dad's office and start on his own. A defiant gesture my dear, but really he was driven to it. One stage a tantrum, of course and pretty near wrecked the plaster. She knows she can get away with anything now." Jeanette's voice was scornful. "You'd think she was the injured party, the way she's ever expected to have a child! She likes that as a whip to drive over Ken and whip him back in line——"

The voice rose in a shrill tone—striking out into the outer shop to whip Ardeth, from a girl who is in hard pain and a swift, wild rage into Ardeth's heart.

Ardeth's love had Ardeth known jealousy like this. Fierce, corroding jealousy, turning over her like a hot wind, leaving a desert in its wake.

Jeanette's words struck in her ears. Cecile. . . . Cecile to have a child. . . . Ken's child!

She pulled off her hat. Her coat. She walked in a misery rearranged her hair. Her hands were shaking. Its the face of Jeanette which looked back from the mirror she whispered with stiff lips. "Well. . . what is it to you? What can you do about it? His wife. . . .

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES

Kellogg's RICE KRISPIES

Forcing back scalding tears. Trying to swallow the painful lump in her throat.

Ardeth Turns Savage

Not even that time when she crouched in the church and watched Ken married had been worse than this. Nothing of the remantic girl about Ardeth in this moment. She was all primitive woman—savage despairing.

"No!" she was crying wildly in her heart. "No—she has no right to his child. . . . mine. . . . .

Later the hot jealousy died. The wind had blown itself out leaving dreadful stillness in its wake. Deep buried resentment poisoning her heart .....Hatred.....even against the child of the future.

A change in Ardeth dating from that day. Unsuspected, some vestige of hope had remained. Perhaps Ken was not forever lost to her. . . . People who were married sometimes disagreed . . . separated . . . married others and were happy . . . .

But now she felt that he was truly lost to her. She had no more right to love him and they had hoped to travel together.

Always a dreamer, sacrificing the golden eye; now. A touch of gentle firmness in her manner.

Many noticed it and put it down to the personality of management in the shop. For Ardeth had thought The Caprice.

The Smokerie Passes

Jeanette had been confronted at the idea of getting rid of the place so easily. She was entirely engrossed in her latest whim—a Poetry Club of women fellows who planned to tour Europe and visit the shrines of great poets. Not that Jeanette had ever written verse. But then, neither had the other members. But they intended to do so some day when they had the time. And just now the club answered its purpose in enabling Jeanette to adopt a calm and detached attitude to mundane things, and to be magnanimous and high-minded on her infrequent visits to Cecile.

At the close of a golden October day the deal was struck. Tom, who had come in at the last moment, leaned back on his elbows and watched the fun.

The copper light of sunset struck through the one narrow window and turned Ardeth's hair to ruddy gold. Her eyes were glowing lopsers as she looked fondly about her.

"It's very own. . . ." she said softly. Then, in a tone grown more practical, "The first thing I'm going to do is give the place a thorough, housecleaning. It just encourages gossip. Those women who come in together and chop up reputations as though they were chopping hash! You should have heard Maida Duvant and that fat Mrs. Curtis in here yesterday snickering over the latest flop."

"The word was potent magnetic!" Tom put in heavily.

"I'm never going to come in here again!" Ardeth's tone was grim. She was remembering the insinuating noises that had appeared at times about Ken. "I don't care if it does mean Tom will have to get his Smokerie!"

She knew that resolution. The back room reverted to type. Down came the hangings of the Oriental set. It became Ardeth's living quarters.

Tom was a part of her regeneration of strict harmony. What she saved by giving up her hotel room played a big part in the night's salary each month.

It was no hardship to live in back of the shop, close to all she held dear in the world. Tom's friends served as her bed. The one window, looking on the narrow alley admitted a ray of light.

Tom scowled on the arrangement. "Good Lord! Woman, that's the maid's room at my sisters! Her room is small, but it's airy and cool. Don't be stubborn, Ardeth. Let me pay Ah Ling's salary and get an apartment."

But she refused stubbornly. "Just remember, you're supposed to be the silent partner in this firm—decidedly silent!"

"But Ardeth——" Tom protested and his face was woeful. "Gosh—just thinking of you here in this dump keeps me from having any fun at all! I can afford it—and what good is all this lousy money piling up in the bank? Don't you realize that money's no good to me if I can't buy a little comfort for you——"

Ziegfeld Turns to the Talkies

Hollywood, April 17—Florenz Ziegfeld who gained fame in glorifying beautiful girls, arrived today in Hollywood to take a hand at making talking pictures. He said he was going to have to "look, listen and learn."

Ziegfeld is to act in an advisory capacity to Samuel Goldwyn, film producer, in the production of Eddie Cantor's new screen vehicle, "Whoopee."

Certain it is talkie or Talkies can play to 30,000,000 people in a short time, but on the stage only 1,000,000 people can be reached in two years," he observed. "That is one reason why I see great things for the talkies."

Ziegfeld, standing with his tiny-haired wife, Billie Burke, and their daughter, Patricia, had something to say about the girl of 1930.

"She should be a brunette—although my wife hasn't got over not saying that. She should be no taller than 5 feet 6 inches, and should weigh not more than 125 pounds. And most important of all she should have more curves than the beauties of the last few years."

EDMONTON GRADS DUEL LAKESIDES

Eastern Girls Outclassed And Lose First Game of Cage Finals, 47-13.

EDMONTON, April 21.—Running wild after being held to a 13 to 7 lead in the first half, Edmonton Grads, defending championships, defeated Toronto Lakesides in the first game of a two-game series for the women's Dominion basketball title, the final score being 47 to 17. The Grads consequently will enjoy an advantage of 30 points when they meet their Eastern challengers on Monday night.

For two full periods the Lakesides gave the Edmonton girls a close battle but after that they faded badly and the all-round effectiveness and superior condition of the Grads took its toll.

Gladys Fry, star centre player, led the attack for the local team. She was able to elude her check for a total of 21 points, supporting her in brilliant fashion were Margaret MacBurney and Millie McCormick. The former contributing ten points and the latter nine to the Grads' total.

It was after the half-way mark that the Grads let loose their drive. With a dynamic combination the champions rapidly increased the leeway and collectively the team piled up 28 points while the Lakesides were held down to nine.

Nora Gordon was the outstanding sharpshooter for the Toronto girls, getting nine of their points, while Dolly Dunlop and Eleanor Rowland found points each. Innes Bramley, rated as one of the best centre players to the Mimico, was closely checked by Gladys Fry and failed to score a single point.

On the Sport Trail

Amateur sport will go somewhere at this city if the plans arranged go through at a meeting to be held on Thursday night in the City Hall. Sometime ago the Belleville Amateur Athletic Association applied for letters patent to form an Association and this charter has been granted. On Thursday night the Association will be formed and organized and every fan will be working to promote real teams in the different sports which Belleville is identified with. Stan Burgoyne coach of the Truro Bear Cats last winter, is in the city and will attend the meeting. It is understood he has been appointed to the coaching of the hockey teams next winter, but nothing definite has been done in this respect. Probably an announcement will be made at the meeting. Everyone is invited to attend and voice their ideas as to the best procedure.

A succession of banquets and presentations have followed in the quake of the fine showing made by the Belleville Collegiate hockey team and tomorrow they will be entertained by the Kiwanis Club with Stan Burgoyne as special speaker of the day. Others that took part in the ice carnival held by the Club will also be invited guests. It will be sports day at the city and a fine attendance should be on hand to encourage the boys, who put the name of Belleville on the map last winter. The boys are unassuming in their victory and have decided to stick together and have another fine team next winter.

Jimmy Hughes, stellar first baseman of the now defunct Deloro senior ball team, who has been attending the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, is home for the summer and will be available for city ball this year. Jimmy was with the Deloro team when it won the championship of Ontario and is a possibility of Harry Mills quitting the game this year and if he does Hughes will fill the bill acceptably. He is a left hander and is a natural at scooping bad throws; balls that will get away from Harry as Mills but will come through in the pinches, probably his batting stance can be improved by Walter Gerow, a real coach of ball players. Hughes is a welcome addition to the squad and a player that mixes well with a team.

It is understood that Hoot Gibson and Tommy Poulter have journeyed to Point Anne and will play with the team in the intermediate league just formed. They have been in communication with the players but their services have not been available. Both hurlers would have been welcome with the Nationals, but they have secured positions where they can better their position in life. The fans wish them every success with their new team and will be out rooting for them on every occasion. Point Anne should shoot cop the silverware with the team, they have behind them.

* * * * * * * *

Tomorrow night the Point Anne hockey team, who won the City League championship, will be entertained at the home of Fred McDonald, an accident hockey fan. The cups won by the club will be presented and a good time will be had by all. Manager Cecil Hamilton, of the league, will also be present to tell the folks what a nice job managing a city league is like. At that Sam did well having some contentious qu estions to handle through the winter.

BILLY REYNOLDS SETS NEW RECORD

Galt Runner Wins 15-Mile Race—McCluskey and Hornby Also Win

Toronto, April 19.—Record crowds, record fields and record performances marked the third running of the Bloor District-Monarch Athletic Club road race held yesterday morning. In the three events first places in two went to out-of-town runners, while the fifth left to Wilf McCluskey, Toronto's most reliable five-miler to uphold this honor in opposition to the six-mile event, repeating the last year's performance. The field in this event was perhaps the strongest ever to start in the race at this distance and the victory of the local runner was certainly a popular one.

Billy Reynolds, in winning the 15-mile event, proved once more that he is without a peer at this distance in competition. He was with comparative ease, establishing a new record of 1.34-47 for the course. Weather conditions were ideal for the run which materially helped the Galt boy to his record victory. Cutbush, the sturdy Guelph runner, finished second, a position which he secured early and maintained throughout the journey. While the first two runners took their positions early in the race, all other positions were hotly contested. The next few places changed frequently and the lead was always in doubt.

McCluskey Wins Six Mile

In the six mile event the favorites ran true to form. Wilf McCluskey, of Monarchs, won his usual well judged race, taking the lead with about two miles to go and holding off all challengers to win by a comfortable margin from W. Krezanoski, of the Cadillac Club, Detroit. Miles Isaacs, the Brant ford Indian runner, was third, while Jimmy Moorcroft, representing the Cadillac A. C. Detroit a popular winner in distance races here a few years back, was fourth.

Many surprises occurred in the three-mile race. Ken Keys, of the Toronto Police A. A., favored by many to win, burned himself out early in attempting to get away from the large field. Walt Horuby, the sorrel-topped Hamilton runner, won the event after a stiff battle with his club-mate, Eddy Rae, while Bob Mitchell, the little Mon arch star, was a close up third.

WINNING TEAMS WILL BE HONORED

On Thursday night of this week, the Y.M.C.A. will conduct a banquet in honor of the winning teams in various physical and social activities. The championship teams in each of the Bowling Leagues, the four championship relay teams representing winners in Ki-Y, Hockey Leagues, Basketball Players, Track and Field Athletes and others will assemble. In addition to a splendid programme of entertainment and distribution of premiums, cups, crests, etc., Mr. Walter Knox of Toronto, Ontario Amateur Athletic Union, an outstanding coach and an Olympic athlete will give an address and will also show the Provincial Government motion Picture illustrating sport and form in various kinds of athletics. Those interested are asked to get in touch with the Y.M.C.A. immediately in order to secure their place at the banquet table.

"Y" Alleys

In the last game of the ladies junior afternoon league this Arenas took all four points from the Pastimes in a game in which both teams appeared to be suffering from spring fever as they were far below their usual good form. High bowlers Mrs. Donnan and Mrs. Ferguson.

Here is the final standing of the ladies' junior league, after a very close race, as a glance at the standing will show, that only seven points separate the first and last teams.

Smile and Try Club	32p.
Flashers	32p.
Arenas	32p.
Pastimes	31p.

We might add that this has been the best season the league has had as the teams were so evenly matched that every game was a hard fought and it was anybody's race right to the last. We congratulate Mrs. Donnan and Trys on winning out and the other three teams on their excellent showing.

In the first senior league game the Cherry Pickers dropped 3 points in the Five Aces. The real feature of the game was the fine string which the Five Aces rolled 1275 to break the previous alley record of 1242 held by the Y Reds. The remarkable part of this is that the game was rolled on each alley. In this game Bears won high with 307.

DEMAR WINS BOSTON ROMP

Veteran of Long Runs Leads Fast Field—Webster of Hamilton Fourth

BOSTON, April 21.— Clarence H. Demar, 41-year-old printer-school teacher, representing the Mahroe, Mass. Amateur Athletic Club, today won the thirty-fourth annual B.A.A. Hopkinton-to-Boston Marathon from as speedy a field as ever competed. For America's premier road-runner it was his seventh victory in the B.A.A. event and his fifteenth victory in 35 Marathon starts.

Demar running a front race for the most part, finished the 26 miles 385 yards in 2 hours 40 minutes and 42 1-6 seconds winning by about a quarter-mile lead. Willie Kyronen and Karl Koski, both of the Finnish-American A. C. of New York, who finished second and third, Koski winner of the A.A.U. championship Marathon held recently at Staten Island, couldn't stand the pace after the first ten miles, the Melrose veteran for the first few miles.

His Fastest Time

Demar's time was the fastest that he ever has made over the course, but was some two minutes behind the record made last year by Clarence Shrubb of the Hamilton Olympic Club. Miles today was twelfth.

Of the thirty-seven runners, by placing men second, third and thirteenth, captured the team title. A record starting list of 318 runners were down to start the race, and 184 finished, more than ever before. The first ten, actually started. Ninety had finished within four hours after the start. The weather was ideal for the race— cloudy overhead, but the rain which was apparently expected did not materialize; the atmosphere was somewhat close, the sun was no factor.

THREE HITS FOR GEORGE FISHER

Cardinals Defeat the Cubs By 11-1 to Even Series with Champions

St. Louis, Mo., April 19.—Giving the Chicago Cubs but two hits while batting out 11 clean, Bill Hallahan held the visiting champions scoreless for nine innings while the Cardinal teammates chalked up 11 in the final game of their four-game series here this afternoon, 11 to 1.

The victory gave the Red Birds an even break with the National League champions.

The Cards started marking down runs in the second inning when Chick Hafey hit one of the longest home runs ever made in the park. Whenever he hit over the deep centre fence, scoring Bottomley ahead of him. He hit with three behind him in the ninth.

Fisher, the Cardinal rookie outfielder, was dominant throughout, resisting his walloping tactics and added three more hits to his record in as many times at bat.

Wilson scored the Cubs' only run in the eighth inning when Fisher made an error in fumbling Wilson's fly. Wilson scored on Taylor's single after advancing on a sacrifice by Olson.

Indians Too Good

The Cleveland Indians nearly shut out the Detroit Tigers in the first of a four-game series here yesterday. The score was 7 to 1.

A couple of singles and a fortuitous error let Rice score in the first, but the ninth to save the Tigers from a whitewash.

The Indians bunched their hits in the second and scored three times off Harrell. In the sixth Cleveland was replaced by Herring, who fared no better, the Indians scoring three more in the eighth.

Ne Hits in Pinches

Failure to hit with men on the bases cost the Cincinnati Reds another game yesterday. The Pittsburg Pirates whipped 5 to 2. The Reds had 10 players left on the bases.

An unusual play made by the losers fell short by one run of tying the score and the Pirates clinched the game in the ninth with their fifth run while Swenson who had replaced Meine, hit a home run for Cincinnati scorers.

Lee Handley utility outfielder, had two doubles, a triple and a single in four hits in five trips to the plate. The Pirates completing the series three games to one.

OBITUARY

MRS. CARRIE VOISIN

Mrs. Carrie Voisin, beloved wife of Alfred Voisin, 240 John Street, passed away at the General Hospital early today. She was taken to the hospital last night in a serious condition and death came peacefully this morning. She was born in Tyendinaga 35 years ago, being the daughter of the late James Finnigan and Mrs. Finnigan, who survives. The deceased has lived in the city for some years and was active in the work at St. Michael's Church. Left to mourn her loss are a husband, two sons, Joe and Jack at home, one sister, Mrs. E. Boles, St. Paul, Minn., and her mother.

"Socialism In Our Time" Goal

Left Wing of Labor Elects James Maxton President

Birmingham, April 21.—Labor's left-wingers are determined to pander to their own cause. As a distinct entity they will work for "Socialism in our time." By large majorities the Independent Labor Party conference meeting here on Sunday endorsed the Parliamentary stand of Labor's so-called "rebels" in the Mosley case.

More than this, the conference supported the reconstruction of the I.L.P. Parliamentary group on a basis of "acceptance by decision of the annual conference, and as interpreted by the National Administrative Council of the party."

James Maxton, the Fenner Glasgow member was re-elected President of the party by acclamation. In a statement issued by Maxton on behalf of the National Council, it was said down that, while the Independent Labor Party desires to continue to work wholeheartedly with the Labor Party for the Labor movement and the Socialist cause, "it cannot accept any limitations of its rights and of obligations of members of Parliament to pay much attention to "Loobo" and the chaps in all over the New Year Gown was plainly that she is crazy about the best dog Jack and Mo'a is good his own sweet way. However the picture ends quite happily for all concerned as Bebel Clayton and Jack Hylton, her fiancé, and Jack and Woods, too, who enact the roles in the Film which they previously created in the stage production.

FATAL CRASH WITH BUS

Jordan, April 21.—One man is dead and another is in a critical condition as the result of a collision involving two cars and a bus on the Niagara Highway near here Saturday night.

The dead man is Harry Goodman, 34 years old, of 1 Grange Avenue, Toronto, driver of one of the cars owned by Lewis Berger, 31 Sullivan Street, Toronto. Berger, who was with Goodman in the car, is in St. Catharines General Hospital suffering from shock and his condition was reported last night as fairly fair. Jack Brennan, also of 1 Grange Avenue, was the third member of the party, and escaped with minor injuries. A Hamilton-St. Catharines bus, filled with passengers, was badly damaged, but no one in it was injured.

"HIT THE DECK"

Jack Oakie, that lovable funny-face scored another hit with the theatre-going public when he made a rip-roaring the large crowds that saw him in "Hit the Deck" at the Belle Ami-tre Saturday. He'll only be here today and tomorrow and everyone should make a point of seeing him before he leaves. This time Jack is in the Navy, not because he wanted to but because Uncle Sam had his mind for him when they saw him hanging around the pier watching the sailors and looking like a lad with his little round hat and grass suitcase. Well Jack gets in the Navy and a mighty fine looking sailor he makes too and from then on the action is fast and funny. The dances are snappy and the singing exceptionally good. Jack Oakie is a very clever actor as we find out in this picture. Polly Walker who co-stars with him is a very talented young lady, she can sing and dance equally well and her speaking voice is good. She has the role of "Loobo" in this production and Jack is "the amateur sailor who always being unpleasant to his overlords". The best scenes are novel because they are a complete reversal of form. Jack doesn't

Amos 'N' Andy Speaking---A Broadcast Biography in Dialect

First Instalment of

Amos 'n' Andy in Person

By James R. Crowell

HERE IS THE STORY of the remarkable rise of Amos 'n' Andy to their phenomenal fame and fortune as radio stars. It's a printed broadcast to the Inkstinable dialect of Amos 'n' Andy—never before to be put in type—with James R. Crowell "announcing." Mr. Crowell is a writer of national reputation; a contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and many other national publications.

With the wealth of first-hand material he obtained from Amos 'n' Andy, Mr. Crowell has prepared a series as informative as it is amusing. There are chuckles and laughs through out.

AMOS 'N' ANDY IN PERSON consists of six instalments, approximately 1200 words each, illustrated with photographs of Amos 'n' Andy, in and out of makeup. The series is for daily release after April 20, 1930.

INSTALLMENT NO. 1

Well, ladies and gentlemen, here they are, the boys themselves—Amos 'n' Andy—ready to tell you in their own characteristic patter the fascinating story of how they got across a great idea in radio broadcasting and lifted themselves from obscurity to a place where their names are almost as well known as those of President Hoover, Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford and Colonel Lindbergh.

Almost every one of you has either heard Amos 'n' Andy over the radio or heard of them. Every night, except Sunday, by broadcast hookups that stretch from coast to coast and reach into hundreds of thousands of homes, these black-faced boys amuse the nation with their troubles and adventures as partners in the Fresh Air Taxicab Company of America, Incorporated. Amos as you know, is the work-horse of the firm. He drives the cab (except when he relaxes and lets Andy in the front seat) while Andy—well, Andy, he's "de president" and spends his time in the taxi office "workin' on de books." "restin' his brain," and "tryin' to think."

What the boys are going to tell you (always in that strange dialect which in the last six months has become a part of the American language) will shed much light on the market value of a good idea in this country. Their sketch is the latest wrinkle in entertainment—a comic serial on the air. Yet not too comic. The ups and downs of Amos 'n' Andy are in reality the ebb and flow of most lives. Every day you and I meet such characters in real life. Amos, industrious, hard working and reliable, good natured and tender hearted, a child of simple faith, trusting and confiding, but withal endowed with rare common sense and foresight! Andy, bumptious and boastful, lazy and gullible, an easy victim to the snares laid by their intriguing brethren, Kingfish and Pat Pending, but staunch in his loyalty to Amos when in a pinch.

Today United States mail trucks have delivered 100,000 letters to the boys from curios persons over the land, demanding that they step from their microphonze hide-out and tell how they engineered the whole enterprize. As the scene opens, Amos has just entered the humble taxicab office to find the "pres-dent" with his feet cocked up on the desk, gazing ruefully at the stack of letters. But well, let the boys tell it to you. Here they are:

"Well, I be dog-gone, Andy, what you think happen today? A ole gal ship me dis twenty-buck bill 'cause I rides her and her poli-parrot 'roun town widout gettin' smash up. Den I make in twelve dollah an' sixty-five cents cruisin' an' on de way home I picks up two dollah an' a half fo' de fo' in some packages. Boy, dis is sho' a red-letteh day fo' de Fresh Air Taxicab Company....Say, what's all dat trash you got pile up heah?"

"Amos, yo is sholy blin'. Dis ain't no red-letteh day. Dem's white."

"Whut's white?"

"Dese letchis."

"Amos, dat time you say sumpin'. "You mean dat trash is letchis."

Boy, dey newsh was no mo' letcht letchets dan dese letchis. De pos'man done bring 'em in a wagon 'n' give 'em to us, all 'em. When I sees 'em I feels sick right down to my dogs."

"Well, I be dog-gone, Andy—whut we gonn' do wid 'em? Whe dey fo'?"

"Who dey fo'? Amos, ev'ah day you is gettin' dumbeh dan de day befo'. Dey fo' us—who you think?"

"Splain it to me, Andy; splain it to me. I jes' don't git no sense out nothin'."

"Co'se not, Amos; you nevah bin 'cause you ain't got no sense to git sense wid. Dat's de whole trouble 'roun' dis yere Fresh Air Taxicab Company—dey ain't my one possun wid brains in it."

"Ay, dat de time he's restin' 'em. 'Splain dem letchis to me, I say."

"Lissen, Amos. Dis yere letchi say, 'Dear Amos 'n' Andy: If you two boys want to bring peace and happiness to our comm-uh, uh—to or c-o-m-m-u-n-i-t-y—dere's a word, Amos, whut is also a word—

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

DEAR READERS:

Just at present the sun is beginning to shine a bit, and you feel as if an Easter parade are looking up However one can never tell what tomorrow will bring, for of course I am writing this a bit in advance. Good Friday brought out many Spring costumes and what one noticed particularly about the coats were the capes that added a graceful touch of movement, that went well with the longer lines of the wraps. Black seemed to be the favourite, with it some were hats of the same to match, while others introduced a brighter colour, with frocks in matching hues showing a little below the coats. Whatever the shade and the ensemble idea was carried out down to the last detail, and there was a ghastly colour combination. All were in blending or matching shades.

Matching scarfs and bags added to the loveliness of the costumes, and some tweed effects had hat, scarf and bag to match the coat material.

The shops on Saturday afternoon were crowded by optimistic people who expected a fine Easter. Dark clouds did not daunt them and every time the sun came out for a moment they felt quite justified in their last minute endeavours to match things, or, in some cases, choose their whole Easter outfit. Little tots were having their Spring togs chosen for them, and some were delighted with the procedure and smiled shyly at their image in the mirrors, while others were bored with the whole affair and much preferred looking out the shop doors and windows to being buttoned into coats, and having their curls tucked into hats.

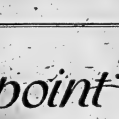
Fashionably yours,
LUCILLE

Today's Poem

THE PATTERAN
By Miss Irving

The skies are gray, a chilly wind
Is tugging at my cloak.
But I have found a violet
Beneath the leafless oak;
And in the withered grass a new
And tender blade of green,
And ferns unrolling by the brook,
Where dry, dead alders lean.

Here is a dry hepatica
Just peeping from the mold
And there an emerald shoot that tells
Where daffodils untold.
The, birds, and bees, and butterflies
Not yet are on the wing.
Yet in the woods and fields I trace
The patteran of Spring.



Flavour guaranteed finer than that of any other corn flake

Answering Notes of Sympathy

DEAR MRS. BECKMAN:
Recently I had a death in my family and I have just received many letters of sympathy. I am at a loss as to the method of answering these. Kindly let me know as soon as possible. E.S.

Ans. These letters of sympathy should be answered. It is not necessary for you to answer them at once, for any friend will, of course, understand this, and it is not necessary for you to write a long letter—just a sentence or two will be sufficient.

Something like this is what we will be expected to write in acknowledgments of letters of sympathy:

Dear Miss Robertson:

You were most kind to send me such a beautiful message of sympathy and I would like to know how deeply I appreciated it.

Most sincerely yours,

or,

Dear Mary

Thank you deeply for the message of sympathy that you and Fred sent to us in our sorrow and for the beautiful rose. You were most kind and we all appreciated so much your goodness and friendliness.

Very sincerely yours,
The Regent, a Guest's
Name.

DEAR MRS. BECKMAN:
I expect to have two men friends of the family for dinner some evening in the near future. The question that is puzzling me is what to say in regard to asking them if they care to wash their hands before eating. C. C.

Ans. It is not necessary, or essential, to use this question. For we take for granted that our guests have wash, et their hands before they arrive at our homes for dinners.

However, under special circumstances it is quite all right for our guests to ask us if they may wash their hands before they enter the dining room. For instance, when we are dining more informally, and when a guest has say arrived from his or her office directly to our home, we should quite take it for granted that they may ask for the privilege of washing the hands before dinner. However, from the very personal nature of the request, it would seem better that the request come from the host than that it should come from the hostess.

Mrs. Beckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

A SILK AND WOOL MERGER

Going into a combine to put over late details of the mode is the latest style move made by silk and wool. Black and white have followed suit. Perhaps some couturiers had difficulty in choosing between the softer woven woolens and the fascinating new silk prints, so decided to use both. At any rate it is a fashion enterprise that is thriving as many of the new ensembles are of the two materials.

The original creation of this merger is illustrated in the model sketched above, which is of black wool crepe and black and white printed silk dress. The manner in which the model is cut with a wide upturned fl front is characteristic on such models designed for street wear. The soft collar draped on the outside of the coat's plain neckline and the wide girdle with inserted fulness give a decorative effect to the tailored costume.

Ontario Lady Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. Wm. Brown Suffered With Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Hamilton, Ont., April 21 (Special)—"I was troubled with Kidney and Bladder trouble," states Mrs. Wm. Brown, 143 Strathcona Ave., Hamilton, Ont. "I had tried a lot of medicines but without avail. I finally tried Dodd's Kidney Pills and to my great joy my Kidneys got in real good shape. I feel so much better now. I keep a box in the house all the time. I would not be without them. I recommend them to all my friends."

There are many symptoms which point directly to kidney disease and were you to enumerate them, Backache, depositis in urine, headaches and aching limbs, harsh dry and itching skin and loss of flesh and weight. To their direct action on the kidneys is due the wonderful success of Dodd's Kidney Pills as a relief for diseases of the kidneys.

Just give them a trial to be convinced.

Fashion Flashes

By Alice Allen

Three is company when it means three different Easter frocks, all worn on a beach ensemble. A white pique suit has appliques of blue linen and an orange shantung coat, edged with the white pique. The beret, parasol and shoes are also of the various fabrics and tones.

Green yet sophisticated tells the story of a lovely evening gown. The frock is of pale leaf green tulle with a bodice of flatnet with deep flounces of the tulle. A matching jacket is of the flatnet, ornamentally with glistening green pailettes.

An important sextette is that which comprises the latest outfit just imported from England. It is designed for sports wear and is composed of skirt, jumper, knickers, coat, hat and hat. In wool or silk or silk and wool mixtures. They are hand embroidered, washable, and extremely durable.

Pearls work and form the tiny bodice of a frock of distinctly Empire lines. It is of green chiffon over a satin foundation, and the entire bodice which of course is very brief is of seed pearls which also form the girdle and shoulder straps.

A bunch of violence is suggested by a cluster of violets made of tin and lacquered in black that are poised against the neck of a dress of navy of black grosgrain ribbon, with beautifully draped lines.

Man contributes much to the lines of the new mode, and it is a delight that suit uses men's wear suiting in blue and white and is of mannish smartness. It shows single link buttons a notched collar and a cutaway front. The feminine note is supplied by the bodice, which has a lace surface forming an ideal background for blue and gold embroidery.

We Rest With Asthma.

Asthma usually attacks at night, the one time when rest is needed most. Hence the loss of strength, the nervous breakdown. Lack of flesh and other evils which must be expected under such a handicap. Fortunately relief is possible. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy has proved its merits through years of service. A trial will surely convince you.

News From Redn ersville Charge

Large and appreciative congregations greeted the pastor, Rev. J. R. Ross last Sunday at both services, and Redn ersville, while the music by the choirs was very helpful.

"Shafts of Light from Darkest Calvary," was the subject for the day and the evening text, "Seven last Utterances of Jesus from the Cross."

At the morning service, the funeral service of the late Mrs. Onderdonk was conducted by Mr. Ross at the home of Mr. Chas. Babcock and was largely attended.

At 3 o'clock, service was held at Victoria, the congregation being largely than usual, and the music by the choir of a high order.

The evening congregation at Redn ersville was large and highly representative while the choir did excellent work.

Tomorrow will be "Red Letter Day" in the charge. There will be a grand Easter service at Redn ersville in the morning at 10.30, in which a host of young people will take part under the leadership of Mr. R. Stafford. In the afternoon at 2 o'clock Mr. A. Phillips will meet the Sunday School force in a real Easter Rally.

At 7.30 p.m. the W.M.S. will have charge of the service at Centre when a general Easter Rally will be held and a fine program presented. The pastor has requested the president and officers to take full charge. Victoria has withdrawn its service in order to attend Redn ersville in the morning and Centre at night.

The regular service will be held at Albury at 2.30 in the afternoon.

The Beauty Box

Upon the cut and fabric of her attire depends the good appearance of a woman who carries with her more adipose tissue than the female form requires. Curves should be curtained, not exhaled. The low cut back of the evening frock displays rolls of fat when the wearer has them, while the high line hides them. When the upper arms are too plump, flimsy draperies of chiffon or tulle are a help. Wearers who are afflicted with fatted calves regard the lowered hemline as the greatest blessing of 1930.

When walking, the body should be carried rhythmically, somewhat like the posture of the soldier as he marches to the music of the band. Toes point straight ahead, chest high, body erect, head tall, hands swinging, feet with a firm grip on the ground. A five mile walk a day grows facial roses, clears out the lungs, rouses the circulatory system, boils up a good appetite and brings refreshing sleep.

The Women's Sphere

Toronto, Ont., April 17—Three members of missionaries families died in Hudson Bay and Northern Manitoba regions during the winter, it has been reported to the home Missionary Board of the United Church of Canada.

Miss Agnes Grahame Jean, daughter of Rev. S. D. and Mrs. Gaudin of Norway House, Indian Mission, and her body was brought out by sled two days' journey across the snows to Cross Lake in order that she may be buried beside the other children of the family. Mr. J. G. Stevens, son of a minister at Le Pas, and a child of Rev. S. A. and Mrs. Martin, Cillam Mission, are also reported dead.

London, April 17—Lady Emily Dyke who is 83 years of age, played the side drums during a special performance of "Marigold" at the Lyceum Theatre recently. Regarded for many years as one of the most expert amateur drummers in England, Lady Emily Dyke is the wife of Sir William Dyke, 7th Baronet of Lullingstone Castle, Kent, who will be 93 this year. "I have been playing the drums for more than 30 years," said Lady Emily to an interviewer. "I started to encourage my daughter, when she was learning the piano, and I have played occasionally at local concerts and dances. Five or six years ago, I played at a charity concert at one of the London hotels." Lady Emily said that jass had never awakened any enthusiasm in her, and that her best drumming was done in accompanying marches and tunes played at the piano.

Toronto, Ont., April 17—Lisi Hummel, world-famed silence cello artist of Vienna, who for some time has been living in Toronto on Rimacrih Rd., has left to join her husband Dr. Henry Borsook in California, where he is associate professor of biochemistry at the Institute of Technology Pasadena.

Spare the children from suffering from worms by using Miller's Worm Powders, the most effective vermifuge that can be got with which to combat these insidious foes of the young and helpless. There is nothing that excels this preparation as a worm destroyer, and when its qualities become known in a household no other will be used. The medicine acts by itself, requiring no purgative to assist it, and so thoroughly clear nothing more is desired.

Between 4,000 and 5,000 rural school children will sing at the Iowa State fair.

Wise mothers who know the virtues of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator always have it at hand, because it proves its value.

MAYOR APPEALS TO MOTORISTS

Mayor Reid's appeal to the citizens of Belleville to assist the police and the council to keep the streets as free as possible from congestion by adherence to certain advice as to parking and use of thoroughfares, Front Street, in particular, while Belleville is passing through the ordeal of having a bridge constructed on its chief artery, Bridge Street, will surely not fall on deaf ears.

Motorists are to be asked to do a little to help the situation by leaving their cars off Front Street especially in the case of merchants, heavy traffic is to be routed along Pinnacle Street, and other changes are to be made. Were adequate laws to meet the situation created by the closing of the bridge will be evident in a few days when the barriers go up on Bridge Street bridge.

The chief magistrate's appeal to the citizens will be no doubt gladly accepted by the people for their own sakes and for the sake of the city. Growing pains of cities are not always pleasant but courtesy and consideration go a long way to offset the disadvantages of the re-routing of traffic.

THE BAR AS HOSTS

The Canadian Bar will in the summer prove that hospitality in the New World means something when two hundred and fifty members of the British Bar will be taken in hand at Quebec City by the Canadian Bar, entertained there and at Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto and then taken to the International bridge at Niagara Falls and there put in the hands of their United States lawyer hosts. All will be without cost to the visitors while they are in Canada.

The bar which gives so many men to every form of human activity has never been so well done so as in bringing civilization in every country to its highest possible peak, which has created most of the laws which protect society, is yet a school of men and women of great personal individual charm. They are a body who have cultivated the social amenities and whose members are the finest companions. During the summer of 1930 the Canadians will prove themselves ideal hosts.

Col. Ponton of this city was in Toronto a few days ago attending a meeting of the Canadian reception committee who are planning to make the visit of the British bar one they will never forget. A large sum of money is being subscribed to entertain the visiting lawyers in a worthy manner.

When the visitors pass into the United States, being received from the Canadians and welcomed on the boundary bridge, there will be further proof of the sympathies of the bar which can overleap the boundaries of nations and meet men and women of the learned professions of any race.

GAY EASTER FINERY

"Gay Easter throng" is a phrase which has come to mean much in the world of fashion. Everyone is interested. Everybody seeks to wear something new on Easter Sunday.

In so seeking to adorn himself and herself in new finery Mr. and Mrs. Style 1930 do but what all nature is doing, putting on their best. There is a spirit of newness in everything. Gaiety of dress symbolizes the gaiety of spirit of the wearer.

EASTER

In the churches on Sunday the story of the Resurrection with its implications which permeate all life was told to reverent throngs throughout the world. Christ never grows old for it meets a need of the human heart. Man cannot ward off contemplation of life here and the possibilities of existence beyond the pale of existence as he knows it. To meet this yearning of the human soul Christianity comes with its satisfying answer.

It is not that man gives his thought wholly to the after-life existence for realization of the eternal importances of living reacts on the life of individual and society here. Our actions which touch our immediate sphere are felt to have undying values.

Easter comes with its message of joy. The fact that our actions leave results here for all time and hereafter for eternity must make such pause but it also adds to the sense of dignity of life, it removes pessimism in its definite assurance of a judgment on human actions. In times before Christ man had a fearful regard over the mystery of the life to come which was but hazily visioned: Christ brought life and immortality to light and scattered the dark forebodings as to the after-death existence. He showed that only in the light of eternal facts and existence could there be a true appraisal by man of life here on earth.

To those who have dwelt in Christian lands and lived in Christian society doubtless the wonder of this message has lost some of its appeal but to the men and women who first learned of this certainty beyond the stars the truth of eternal life and a continued individual existence must have come with a revolutionizing force enough to upset ancient society which it did in a few decades. Could men but catch this sense of wonder today the world would be transformed overnight.

SIDELIGHTS

The bloodroot bells in dew and morning mist
Entreat the errant bee to drone its prayer,
To sip the tulip's chalice in Eucharist,
In cobalt temples of the incensed air.
A blond boy beatified as acolyte,
The haloed dandelion attends his place,
The lily wears a lovely wimple white
And meditates on Messianic grace.
Nature, a princess in the April sun,
Endues the earth with stricter rectitude;
A rigid reverence is required and won—
Even the trillium is a monk in hood.
Each tree springs like an altar from the sod,
And every meadow sings the mass of God.

FOOTBRIDGE is not any too pleasant a place to walk now with its imitation of St. Vitus Dance every time two or three try to walk over it at the same time. It is of a dizzy looker nese which makes the legs feel as if they were dislocated at the knees. What will happen when the traffic is increased by the closing of the lower bridge is plenty. It should be placed in as good condition as possible at once.

ALL THIS TALK of closing the lower bridge all summer is so much "bologney," surely. Railways can place a new bridge in position without delaying a train. Why should this bridge be closed for months? Just to suit the contractor, probably. But with the amount of traffic depending upon this bridge the main part of the contract should depend upon how little time the bridge must be closed. Last year's experience of having Dundas street closed and its business men out of business for months in their busiest season should not be repeated.

DEATH CAN OVERTAKE a man in so many ways now that scientific invention has reached such a high peak that no one should be without accident insurance. Take for instance the series of casualties which followed an airplane accident last week. The plane became tangled in high tension wire at Lipsitanti, Michigan. Levi Keppler, bank clerk, passenger, leaped from the plane, struck the power wires and was burned to a crisp. The plane burst into flames and fell a few feet from the unconscious form of the pilot, Leo Hanselmann, who suffered burns. Harry Walters, superintendent of the airport, rushed up with a chemical fire extinguisher, turned it on the flaming plane, only to be killed instantly by the electric current which came from the power wires and followed the chemical stream to Walters' body. William Clawson, retired farmer, a spectator, hastened to help Walters fight the fire, touched Walters' arm and died instantly.

APRIL ESCAPADE - - - - BY KATHLEEN NORRIS

"Don't burn your hand, darling. Why of course it's doing the wrong no matter how safe it looks, that is the sin, don't you see? And doing the right thing is always right, no matter how hot it looks!"

"But you aughtn't to give scandal, ought you, Mary Kate" Tess asked conscientiously.

Her dark face was flushed to gipsy beauty as she stirred some creamy com pound in a saucepan. She appealed to the infallible authority.

"It's wrong to set a bad example, even if what you're doing isn't what it looks like, isn't it, Mother?"

"Don't let that catch on the button," was Mrs. O'Hara's mysterious reply. Tess recommenced her arrested stirring briskly. Where's Tom?"

"Tom was here after school, and he went out, and he said he'd be back! someone supplied. They all sat down, Mart suddenly appearing in their midst, from upstairs, looking clean and neat, and weary.

"Lecture tonight, Mart?"

"Yep. Anyone see my yellow fountain pen?"

"I saw the sort of orange one, Mart had, in it."

"That's Tom's big one. I gave it to him myself. A man came into the office selling them for sixty cents—"

"Eat your potato, Mary Kate."

"Mother, you want me to be simply gross!"

"Suppose you murdered a man—I mean suppose you were not. Regina fascinated by the topic of crime, and scandal, began again interestedly.

"Would that be setting a bad example, I mean if you had to—"

"You'd never have to," Martin assured her discouragingly.

"Oh Mart suppose he was killing you?"

"But that wouldn't be murder! That would be self-defense."

"No, but listen, Mart." This was Mary Kate, deeply—indeed, although no one suspected it, painfully, interested. "Suppose I did something—suppose you and I were brother and sister and we went down and took a house at Carmel—"

"You are brother and sister," the literal Tess said in surprise.

"No, but suppose we took a house at Carmel, and everyone thought we were married—to other people, I mean, and that Mart had a wife, and I had a husband—"

"Why couldn't we simply tell them we were sister and brother? Lots of sisters and brothers—"

Mary Kate brushed pondered a minute.

Tom, who had entered with a rush of cold air, thrown his coat and hat in a corner, and wedged himself in between Pat and his mother now seated a plate, helped himself ravenously to everything within reach, and said with

Mrs. O'Hara, displeased with the turn the conversation had taken, said impatiently, 'Sin is sin, and right is right and we are all born knowin' the one from the other."

"No, but honestly," Mart said. "It's hard t othink of a thing that is right, and looks wrong. Things look pretty much what they are."

Mary Kate stared at him, brighteyed and unconvinced, and he smiled in his kindly big-brother fashion, as he pretty eager little sister.

"Well, don't you think so, Molly?"

"I was just wondering."

"There's darned little," Mart said thoughtfully, that can't be explained."

"Don't you think you—don't you think someone, might do something, Mart, something that—well, no, it wouldn't look wrong exactly, but it would be a sort of risk—"

"Nothing wrong in it, Itself?"

"Oh, no!"

"No. For everyone who knew anything about it at all would know it was all right."

"Well, then—" His shrug was infinitely heartening. Her sober face brightened.

Dinner, never a prolonged or formal occasion, was over now, and the children had moved to the dining room table for lessons. Mart took the chair next to Mary Kate, and jerked it close to her, and put an arm about her, and she dropped her proud, bright head to his shoulder. -

"She's awful nice, Mom," Mart said wearily.

Mrs. O'Hara slid a casual handful of piled dishes into the sink.

"Pick up your hat and coat, Tom," she said.

"Oh, I'm tired. I'm awful fond of you, Mary Kate," Mart said wearily and sleepily.

"Mother, can I go 'round to Kelly's?" Tom muttered.

"I don't know why you'd want to work in that dirty garadge nights, when you don't do your lessons," his mother objected. The boy's face grew dark.

"I hate those darn"lessons!" he said mildly.

"Out it out," Mari directed him briefly.

"Cursin' will get you nowhere," his mother added.

Mary Kate felt a little pang of pity for clumsy dirty, solitary Tom. He always seemed out of things, somehow—against the current. She wished that it was his arm that was about her, and that her head was against his cheek, instead of Mari's. Tom was always hungry for popularity. Everyone loved Mart, everyone praised him.

Naval Disarmament Treaty Is Signed

Greatest Conference Is Concluded Today In London

GREATEST NAVIES OF WORLD CUT BY PACT SIGNED IN LONDON ENG.

Memorable Event Takes Place in Queen, Anne's Room

SCRAP 9 BATTLESHIPS

Safeguarding Clause Is Inserted In The Treaty

London, April 22 (CP)—Representatives of the five dominant naval United States, Japan, France and powers of the world, Great Britain, Italy, today affixed their names to the epoch-making treaty, limiting and reducing the navies of three of the other two. Col. Henry L. Stimson, United States Secretary of State, and his colleagues on the United States delegation, were the first to affix their historic document. M. Briand, French Premier, Rt. Hon. J. Ramsay MacDonald, British Premier, and Admiral Giuseppe Sirianni with their delegations followed. Senior naval officers of the British Dominions and India signed with the British delegation.

Ends Greatest Conference

The impressive but dramatic ceremony which marked the culmination of the greatest international conference of all time took place short ly after midday in the ancient Royal Palace of St. James. The setting was one for an artist, the final plenary session of the parley being held in Queen Anne's drawing room with its hand ped tapestry, from the mast of which floated three gilt portraits of a long line of kings.

Fourteen weeks of the Conference was ushered in today being in the midst of a dense fog which pervaded the House of Lords in a ghost-like fashion. There was also a chill in the air today, but shortly after the plenary session convened April sunshine burst through the mists and glinted from the golden trappings of Queen Anne's favorite room.

Makes All Categories

The treaty signed definitely limits the navies, in all the categories of Great Britain, United States and Japan and provides reduction in ships already under construction in at least one category, capital ships. France and Italy did not sign because of differences and so today adhered only to the other sections of the treaty which, important enough in them selves, presented a capital ship holiday, limitation on the sizes of submarines, humanization of their use and record agreement on other technical phases of conference work.

Short Session

The formal signing of the treaty occupied less than half an hour. As fourment was taken after less than the three hour meeting in which the chief delegates in formal address had expressed their gratification at their handiwork, deplored that they had not been able to go as far as they wished, but expressed the hope that the conference in 1935 in turn would remove the obstacles to completete the four agreement on limitation and reduction.

Meet Again In Parley In 1935

In opening his address, Mr. Mac-Donald, who as chairman piloted the conference through the dangerous shoals which threatened it from the very beginning, declared that the 1930 conference provided for by the Washington treaty would not be held, and that the next naval conference would take place in 1936, unless by mutual such a happy nature take place mean. while that it be not required."

An ounce of reality is worth a pound of romance.

FRANCE AND ITALY SIGN AGREEMENT ON MINOR QUESTIONS

DELEGATES SPEAK

Next Parley Will Be Held Five Years Hence

London, April 22 (C.P.)—By the terms of the naval treaty signed today the United States should have achieved parity with Great Britain by the date of its expiration, December 31, 1936. Japan will occupy at that time a ratio of naval power somewhere between five-five-three capital ship ratio agreed upon at the Washington 1922 conference and the ten-ten-seven auxiliary ship ratio which the Tokyo delegation put on the beginning of this conference.

Scrap 9 Battleships

Nine battleships are to be scrapped, or, in the case of three, converted into training vessels, and a five year capital ship construction holiday is declared. The ships to be scrapped are the United States, Florida, Utah, and either Arkansas or Wyoming; for Great Britain, Benbow, Emperor of Hindustan, Emperor of India and Tiger; Japan will scrap Hiyei.

Under Treaty Limits

Under the treaty the United States may have 18,000 tons of large cruisers; Great Britain 146,800 tons, and Japan 108,400 tons; in small cruisers the United States may have 143,500 tons—Great Britain—339,200 tons, and Japan 100,450 tons; Destroyer tonnages are set at, United States, 150,000 tons; Great Britain 150,000 tons and Japan 105,500 tons. Each of the three powers agrees to keep its submarine tonnage within 52,700.

Safeguarding Clause

Neither France nor Italy is signatory to this section of treaty limiting cruisers and auxiliary craft and a safeguarding clause has therefore been inserted which will allow either of the three powers to increase its programme the others increasing their proportionately should a continental naval race develop.

France and Italy signed the section, of the Treaty fixing the capital ship holiday, prescribing the rules of submarine warfare and relating to the less important phases of Disarmament.

LATE SENATOR IS

BORNE TO GRAVE

Ste. Styacinthe, Que., April 22 (C.P.)—In the presence of a distinguished gathering representing every class of state, the body of Hon. Georges Casgrain, Conservative representative of the Senate, was buried here today. A large delegation from the Provincial and Quebec arrived today for the funeral services. Interment was in the Casgrain vault.

TOMATO PLANTS

ARE TRANSPLANTED

A number of farmers in the vicinity of Redneresville, Prince Edward County are at present engaged in transplanting tomato plants from the hot beds to what is termed a growing plot. Upwards of one million plants are thus being transplanted and these are for the growing of tomatoes for canning factories. The soil in that vicinity is conducive to tomato plant growing.

ONE KILLED FIVE INJURED IN HEAD-ON CRASH AT FALLS

Injured In Hospital as Result of Crash In Stamford Township

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 22 (CP)—One woman was instantly killed, another woman and man perhaps fatally injured and three other women and man sustained less serious injuries and are in hospital here as the result of a head on collision at midnight in Stamford township. The dead woman is Mrs. Pearl Ewing, Gaillfect, Ontario, and more critically injured, Robert Ewing, Hamilton, bad skull fracture and lacerations and Miss Helen Ensing, Buffalo, had bad head wounds and a broken right arm. Those less seriously hurt are Mrs. Ensing, Hamilton; Alois Wormak, Buffalo, his sister, Pearl King and Irene Gervas, all of Buffalo.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP FOR OUTSTANDING RECITAL

Mr. Empson McCormick, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McCormick of this city, who has been studying piano in Toronto, during the past two years, is the winner of the Heintzman Scholarship valued at $50.00 cash, awarded for the most outstanding recital of the year given at the Toronto Conservatory of Music. In winning this scholarship Mr. McCormick has definitely established himself as an artist of exceptional ability and his many Belleville friends extend their congratulations and wishes for continued success.

Mr. McCormick will play at the annual closing of the Toronto Conservatory of Music which will be held on April 30th in Massey Hall. This Belleville boy undoubtedly possesses exceptional talent and his performance on that night will be heard by several visitors from this city.

YOUNG BRITON TELLS OF GANDHI'S "BATTLE OF SALT"

Reginald Reynolds, the young Englishman, who was chosen to convey and to deliver to the Viceroy of India the ultimatum of Mahatma Gandhi, so-called dictator of India, the ultimatum informed the Viceroy that Gandhi intended to civilly salt, in defiance of the present laws.

SNOW ON APRIL 22ND NO RECORD

Snow Has Fallen As Late As April 28th Records Show

It may be springtime theoretically, but for all practical purposes it is still winter. Indeed, the thermometer this morning registered just an even thirty-two degrees above zero, freezing point, although later on the mercury managed to touch forty. Records show that on April 22nd it began to snow in a half-hearted way. Yesterday was distinctly warmer, the temperature that the mercury agreed to being thirty-one degrees above zero, while the highest was forty-four degrees. It would appear to be a little premature for taking the "woolies" off yet awhile.

Light snowflurries visited Belleville and vicinity this morning and a cold northeasterly wind prevailed. It is also more that Winter has by no means given up its reign. Snow on the 22nd of April, however, is a great rarity as can be seen by a glance over the files in the public works department at the City Hall. In fact, if one is to judge by the records of the past few years we may still experience a fall of snow as late as June 23rd, and even as late as 28th deep somewhere around April 28th.

Starting in with the year 1926 it may be interesting to review the vagaries of the weather up to the present date. Glancing over the 1926 files we find that on June 21st Belleville was visited by an electrical storm at 3.45 in the afternoon and that for a large as marbles fell during the storm. The springtime of the same year was exceptionally cold and late, with two hail storms occurring in the month of May. On the morning of January 30, 1927, the weather man handed out a surprise in the form of thunder and lightning. The storm was not severe and no damage was done. However, an electrical storm at the coldest month of winter is something of a record. On April 25th, 1928, the records show that it snowed during the night and morning, and that the month was a cold one. Snow also very backward. Last year snow fell as late as April 28th to the depth of an inch in Madoc and vicinity. In Belleville on the same date hail fell at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Another late snowstorm was experienced in the city on April 18th last year, and the ground was covered with a white blanket. These records which cover only the past five years show that the weather of this month is by no means ing out of the ordinary but that on the contrary the weatherman is only reverting to form.

Possibility of testing the health and strength of living trees by X-ray is being investigated.

BODY OF JACK SAVAGE FOUND THIS MORNING

Remains Discovered by William Fry, Near Anderson's Coal Dock

WERE TO BLAST

Firemen Were Prepared to Use Dynamite to Raise Body

After seven weeks of agonized search ing on the part of his father, seven weeks of almost ceaseless vigil on the part of the Belleville Fire Department, under Chief Lynch, the body of little eight-year-old Jack Savage, who met a tragic death on March 10th, has been found. He slipped on a piece of ice and plunged into the icy waters of the Bay of Quinte near Victoria Park, was discovered this morning floating face downward just off Anderson's dock.

Discovery

William Fry, South Front street, who is employed by Mr. Robert Dodd and Lumber Company, usually takes a walk down to the dock in the morning to stimulate his appetite for breakfast. This morning, at ten minutes to seven, he walked down his house, which fronts the coal dock and walked over to the water. He had no idea searching for the body, but happened to glance down in the water close to the dock, and, floating in the water he discovered were the remains of the Savage boy.

Cap Sill On

Mr. Fry promptly notified the police and Coroner Dr. Boyce, was soon on the scene. The body was taken out of the water and removed to the Belleville General Hospital. It was fully clothed, even to a cloth cap on the head and the boots. The remains were in a good state of preservation. Mr. Fry told

Holocaust In Ohio State Penitentiary Last Night

PRISON CROWDED

Strange Incidents In Fire Believed To Be Incendiary

Columbus, Ohio, April 22 (CP)—The lives of 317 Ohio penitentiary convicts were snuffed out by flames and smoke while they were locked to their cells last night, according to the official casualty count made early today by state officials. More than one hundred and fifty-four prisoners were in the penitentiary hospital and from 60 to seventy of them were in a critical condition from burns and smoke inhalation they inhaled when fire raged in parts of four cell blocks which housed 4,300 men. Built for 2,500 above capacity for which it was intended, when the fire broke out at an hour-after-night, was fanned by a stiff wind, swept through the upper tiers of four blocks, spreading death and suffering in its wake.

Columbus, Ohio, April 22—Guards of the Ohio Penitentiary cell block where 317 men were burned to death or suffocated by fire last night, broke into flames again this morning. The fire company responded with blaze.

Condemned Men Escape

Columbus, April 22—By some irony of chance, all the prisoners awaiting execution in death row escaped last night. When the blaze menaced their cells they were transferred to the solitary confinement section.

Fire started in the dairy, until the where three prisoners last Saturday attempted to saw their way to freedom through bars. They were surrendered and recaptured by guards who discovered them as they were ready to dash for liberty.

Threaten Guards

Theodore Wilson, head blackamith, sentenced thirty years ago to serve a life sentence was right. Christmas when he told his fellow convicts — "This will be my last Christmas here." Prisoners recaptured him. Hitelss and swathed in blanket, when the dead were being counted.

While hundreds of convicts died, a pet kitten whose antics had amused many of the victims, lived. Howard Crandall, inmate of the kitten, carried it in his pockets.

One convict escaped during the fire, it was reported today. Michael Born, used up in death to serve one to fifteen years for burglary was recorded as missing from the hospital, where he was treated for burns. Brother of four brothers, confined in the penitentiary, three among the dead. They were Frank and Theodore Anglian, serving life for murder, and Joseph Born. Two other brothers, John and William, escaped the fire unharmed in the lower tier of the lifated cell block and escaped.

Guards Suspended

Murmurings last night against Warden Thomas Maxwell, guard, who was charged with eluding to give up keys to prisoners, was set free on $5,000 surety, brought his suspension from the Warden Harry Walkinson was one of the two guards on duty in the section where fire broke out, his greatest toil. TRENTON AND DISTRICT

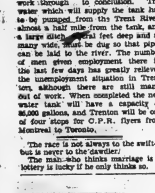
Village Loses Chief Industry

Provincial Government's Failure to Build Road Is Disappointing

FRANKFORD, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—So far there has been no announcement made as to another company taking over the Frankford Paper Mills, and it appears as though this town will lose its main industry on May 1st. Every employee of the firm, which went into bankruptcy several months ago, received notice that his services would not be required after the first of May, and many have already left the village to look for work elsewhere. The merchants are asking themselves what it will mean to them and their business by having the mill close down, throwing about one hundred and, twenty-five men out of work and some of their views are none too optimistic.

It has now yet been announced what will be done with the Power Plant at the mill, which supplies the whole of Frankford with light and power but which was operated by mill employees. These men received their notice at the same time as the others. There is a strong possibility that the Hydro will take over the Power Plant for the time being at least.

Many Frankford men were counting on getting work on the Trenton to Frankford road this summer, but as the appropriation was not passed in the estimates for the paving of this stretch these men seem doomed to disappointment in that respect also.



Complete Work on Water Tank

Will Have Capacity of 85,000 Gallons, Pumped From River

TRENTON, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter).—Twenty more men were taken on yesterday morning as the C.P.R. here to help build the huge new water tank just west of the Station. Thus, a total of over fifty men and five teams are rushing this work through to completion. The water which will supply the tank has to be pumped from the Trent River, almost a half mile from the tank, and a large ditch several feet deep and as many wide, for the pipe is being laid and can be laid to the river. The number of men given employment there in the last few days has greatly relieved the unemployment situation in Trenton, although there are still many out of work. When completed the new water tank will have a capacity of 85,000 gallons, and Trenton will be one of four stops for C.P.R. flyers from Montreal to Toronto.

Triple Crash Occurred Near Overhead Bridge

Richard Jago, Toronto May Face Charge of Reckless Driving

TRENTON, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter). — Three persons were hurt, more seriously, and two cars and a lumber wagon badly damaged in an accident two miles west of Trenton late yesterday afternoon. Richard F. Jago, 134 Burtmont Ave., Toronto, will likely face a charge of reckless driving, as police believe the accident to have been his fault.

He was driving west on Provincial Highway No. 2 and came up behind a waggin being driven by H. R. Dafoe, hired man working for Gordon Little, York Road. Jago apparently was coming too fast, as he was unable to avoid hitting the rear of the wagon as he swung out to pass. Just as he swung out from behind the wagon, however, he was struck by an east bound car driven by R. W. Wilcox of Oakville. Mrs. Jago, who was riding in the front seat with her husband, was thrown violently out of the car and onto the pavement cutting her head badly and rendering her unconscious for a few moments. She fell between the two cars but luckily escaped being crushed between them although she had only inches to spare. Mr. Jago hit his head violently against some object in the car as the machine came to rest against a telegraph pole, along with Wilcox' motor, which necessitated medical attention. The Oakville driver, however, escaped without injury.

When Jago car struck the lumber wagon, Mr. Dafoe, the driver was thrown between the heels of the horses and the wheels of the wagon, and was dragged for several yards before he regained his feet, as the horses started to run away. They were brought under control before they had gone far, however. In some unaccountable manner Dafoe was not hurt at all, and one was taken from each one animal's rear off the other horse. How this happened could not be explained, and will likely remain as one of those peculiarities which sometimes occur in accidents.

Fortunately for the injured persons, a car from Montreal happened along shortly after the accident occurred which contained a trained nurse, who had a First Aid kit handy and who rendered service to the three accident victims. It is thought that Mr. Dafoe, the driver of the team, was the least the most, although he was able to tell the police his version of the accident shortly afterwards. Mrs. Jago was very forunate that she did not sustain more serious injury than she did, for the collision after she was thrown out of the car was dangerous in the extreme. Jago car can be seen being dragged by a pole along the road, she would likely have been crushed between the two vehicles.

Sergeant White of the Trenton Police Force investigated the accident, and the case was then turned over to Provincial Constable MacBrien of Brighton, who questioned the principals at the Trenton Police Station. As yet it is not known whether a reckless driving charge will be laid against Mr. Jago. The pavement was very slippery at the time of the accident and visibility was poor.

FRANKFORD CHOIR PRESENTED CANTATA

FRANKFORD, April. 22. —(Special by Staff Reporter)—The Choir of Frankford United Church presented the Sacred Cantata, "The Thorn Crowned King", by Fred B. Holton, in this Church on Easter Sunday evening, and the house of worship was packed to the doors, many having to be turned away. So well was the cantata sung and so many were unable to hear it that the choir will again present it at the church on a week from Friday evening.

Wanderers Tell Fascinating Yarn

Trenton Police Station Besieged by Rain—Soaked Travellers

TRENTON, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Yesterday's rain brought the tramps and "hoboes" in off the roads earlier than usual, and by late afternoon there were several "drying out" by the stove in the Trenton Police cells. Deep silence prevailed as the writer was admitted to the cells, and the door clanged shut behind him, where a moment before there had been a fairly animated conversation between a man, who by his accent had been only a short time in this country and a nondescript individual who might have been anything. The proffering of a "smoke", however, broke the ice and the conversation continued, the foreigner telling in halting English how hard he had tried for the past six months to get work, from one end of Canada to the other, and his companion agreeing with all he said and adding more.

Asked as to what they lived on in the way of food, the reply made was "anything we can beg, borrow or steal". They agreed with the writer that the police were "pretty good" to them, but only that's reservations. One fellow said that some of the police were good, —others were not so good. This particular pair had been told to get out of Kingston, along with fifteen or twenty others who were waiting for navigation to open, while a day or so later a "hopper" on a boat gave them fifty cents to get something to eat. And so it goes. Every night there is a long string of these homeless wanderers, each one with a different tale, yet all much the same. They wander from one end of the country to the other and back again, the majority looking for work and thy rest half afraid that they will find some.

The correct number was 2,655 and both Miss Foster and Mr. Jandrew guessed 2,655.

LANDMARK OF CONNECON GONE

One of the oldest landmarks in Connecon has been torn down, the former home of Dr. Thornton, which was recently sold to Dr. Vanluven. The house was one of the first in the county to be built of brick, and was erected by Dr. J. Bell, who was burned to death in a fire in the building 75 years ago. Dr. Thornton purchased the property after the fire. Dr. Vanluven is building a fine residence on the site.

CONCRETIA WAS RELEASED FROM QUINTE SHOALS

Government Boat Went Aground While Lifting Navigation Buoys

The Concretia, Provinvial government buoy vessel after being frozen in the ice in Murray Bay near Brighton all winter was finally released late last week. Yesterday while the craft in charge of Capt. John Martin was proceeding down the Bay of Quinte lifting buoys, it grounded on a shoal near "Bigger Island" off the new air camp site. Fourteen of the crew were marooned from six o'clock yesterday morning until early last night when the Tug Davis owned by the Prontenac Dredging Company of Kingston and in charge of Captain Palmateer went to the rescue. The latter succeeded in releasing the Concretia after ten minutes, and was able to proceed down the Bay enroute to Prescott where she will undergo the annual overhauling. The bottom of the boat was not damaged in the contact with the shoal.

Canada Stable Is Opinion of Sir John Aird

Chief of Bank of Commerce Thinks Depression Slowing Down

By Augustus Bridle
(Special to The Ontario Intelligencer)
(Copyright 1930)

TORONTO, April 22.—(ENS)—Sir John Aird, president of The Canadian Bank of Commerce, was not startled by the suggestion that he might say something authentic concerning the present state of minor depression in business. Sir John is not as a rule seriously startled about anything in business. He has the habitual poise of one who has grown up with the world's best system of banking in a country so vast and underpopulated as Canada.

He has been in The Bank of Commerce since the year Sir John Macdonald inaugurated the national policy which is exactly 22 years. He has not only seen Canada pass through all her phases of development, but as a banker steadily in the same building viewing from province to province and from the lower of officers from office boy to president, he has been able to feel Canada's development as no other banker in Canada ever did except the late Sir Edmund Walker whose career in the Bank of Commerce so closely resembled Sir John's both in length of service and in helping a good thing to grow for Canada and the country.

All great bankers are conservative. Sir John, following Sir Edmund whose messages on thrift were classics of national prudence, is no exception. He thought a moment before he said a word; a habit which Sir Edmund Walker had. Then he spoke a few words of a question before giving a syllable of answer. "Is there is nothing to be in the least alarmed at in Canada's present state of business," he said. "We are going more nearly normal now than we had been just before the pres ent only may's reservations. Because I said that some of the policy were good, —others were not so good. This particular pair had been told to get out of Kingston, along with fifteen or twenty others who were waiting for navigation to open, while a day or so later a "hopper" on a boat gave them fifty cents to get something to eat. And so it goes. Every night there is a long string of these homeless wanderers, each one with a different tale, yet all much the same. They wander from one end of the country to the other and back again,n the majority looking for work and thy rest half afraid that they will find some.

"Much of it is due to being so young a country perhaps?"

Sir John said emphatically that we had resources constantly being developed," he answered. "Yes, we have a wonderful country. We have had learning to engage in respect to its staples, and confidence. We have not been because of the wheat not moving out last year. That is being gradually overcome. Five percent of our wheat is basic to our welfare.—The west is our barometer. The western farmer needs to be cheerful in the outlook for the sake of the whole country."

"And the slump in the stock market?"

"It affected everybody. That is the older side of the problem and in some of its aspects much the most complex."

Suggest Over-Speculation

Sir John said not, say that people had been over interested in speculation. He only seemed to suggest it. To him the shake-up in the stock market came as a sort of medicine to a state of disease. Speculation is not as a rule good for business.

"There will not be so much crescendo in building this year as there was last year," he said. "What of that? We can't always go on accelerating our tempo in business. What we do need is a net mean average of progress which must be varied according to particular conditions , such as we now have. I see nothing unusual in it; nothing to cause anyone the least worry or anxiety. Canada has always had a marvellous power of recovery. That is part of our national heritage."

"There are no really hard times now, compared to those we used to have?" I asked him, thinking not so much of its slump of 1907 as of earlier ones, especially that of 1893.

"Yes", he said. "I remember that in 1907 conditions were as bad in the United States that even money was sometimes impossible to get. It was not a case of over-production altogether, or of people being unable to buy; but actual money went into hiding. Because of the run on the banks which amounted to a panic over there such as we have never had in Canada. The moment the natural medium of exchange refuses to function because it can't be found in circulation things are in a bad way. Chicago—which usually manages to get the limelight in economic as well as in moral affairs—was in such a predicament in 1907 that there was no money in the city with which to carry on business. The medium of exchange was a series of cardboard cartons absolutely valueless outside of Chicago but necessary as a negotiable symbol of value in trade as hand notes are. Such a state of affairs now would be regarded as calamitous."

"Did we ever have such a condition in Canada?" I asked remembering here after the outbreak of war. Sir Edmund Walker said that Canada, of all nations, could best meet a monetary stringency because she had such a vast experience in all sorts of currency back to the beaver skin and token days.

"Yes, but we have long outgrown such emergency conditions. We have an unshakable economic system in Canada unless we deliberately wreck it. Our resources are so vast and our economic experiences have been so varied. We learned to creep before we learned to walk. When we came to walking age we were able to progress at a phenomenal rate without seriously wrecking our mechanism of progress."

"Yet there are certain world conditions in which Canada is more than ever a participant," I suggested. "Just as the United States found it impossible to keep out of a world war?"

"Yes," he admitted cautiously, "the world is into the machine age now just as definitely as in ancient days it was into the stone age and the bronze age and the age of wood. Science and invention, both accelerated by the war for swift production, have brought the machine age on at a much greater speed than the old thing ever happened before. The change may not seem as drastic as it was when machines first supplemented labor. But modern inventions have affected vastly greater masses of population.

Dickey, Belleville, vs. Morris for School Boy cup held by Dickey, three. Three two minute rounds.

Blake, 112 lbs. Oshawa, vs. Crawford 112 lbs. St. James' Athletic Club, Toronto. Knockout for Crawford in second round.

Parks, 126 lbs., Lalds, vs. Vardy, 126 lbs., Deseronto. Parks declared winner on technical feel by Vardy.

Ferry, 125 lbs., Belleville, vs. Delaney 128 lbs., Classic Athletic Club, Toronto. Ferry won decision.

Ripley, 147 lbs., Oshawa, vs. Kline, 147 lbs., Belleville, Ripley won decision.

Nicholson, 147 lbs., Classic Athletic Club, vs. Stocks, 147 lbs., Oshawa. Knocked for Nicolson in first round.

Bentley, Napanee, vs. Barber, St. James' Athletic Club, Toronto. Bentley winner, Kentley, decision.

Fred Leonard, heavyweight, Belleville, vs. Skimmings, heavyweight champion of Ontario Silverthorn Athletic Club of Toronto. Knockout for Skimmings in 43 secs. of first round.

Class will tell.

And the large crowd proved it.

One of the best cards ever given in the fight public of this city and district was sponsored last night at the Armouries by the boxing committee of the Canadian Legion and when the last bout was over, the crowd expressed their approval of the fine card. Every bout scheduled was a real scrap. The committee decided to give the fight fans something for their money and journeying to Toronto induced some classy boys from the St. James' Athletic Club, Classic Athletic Club and Silverthorn Athletic Club to come to Belleville to show their wares against the local mitt contingent. The local boys did better than expected and two or three decisions marred the programme. Harry Robinson, an old mitt artist, was third man in the ring with Gordy Wallbridge and Angus McPhe as judges. Some of the decisions did not please the crowd but they were given in all fairness and most of them were close to being right.

A bout looked forward to on the card was not the thriller expected. Bill Skimmings, champion heavyweight and motor cycle cop of Toronto, was brought down to give Fred Leonard, the local heavyweight, a battle, but the bout did not go far enough to get a line-up either way. Leonard was away with a flash and clean cut Skimmings fell in the opening exchanges and forcing him to his own corner laid a short left hook to the button and it was all over. Leonard was out cold and it was some time before he was brought around. Skimmings had height, reach and weight on his opponent. The committee should have brought a heavier light as a preliminary before setting him in against a man like Skimmings. The Traffic Officer will be a real boy and will be welcomed back at any time, preferably against "Pinpe" Brown, the slugging Toronto master, whom he defeated for the Oshawa title.

Next in importance was the bout between Ferry of Belleville and Delaney of the Classic Club in the 126 lbs. class. This bout was a pippin and Ferry jabbed out a neat decision. At all times Ferry was on top and his left was working to perfection. He stabbed Delaney as he was coming in and would time him with the right as he was going out. The infighting was clever with Ferry being at all the better. The crowd were tense as the battle flowed and both boys were given a hand when they left the ring.

Crawford, of St. James' Club, was always the best with Blake, of Oshawa in the 112 lb. class. Crawford beat a continual tattoo on the body of Blake and had him in distress early. In the third round Crawford showed his advantage and after a sharp exchange on the ropes, Crawford floored Parks while he was down and the referee immediately awarded the bout to Parks. The crowd booed the decision, but the referee was perfectly right. The crowd thought the referee should have allowed the bout to continue as Parks was not hurt, but rules are rules and the referee can only act as per the game on its feet in this city.

Art Angell made many friends in his game and spirited bout of the Classic Athletic Club in the 118 lb. class. Jones was well up in the Ontario finals and Angell is starting in the game. It was the case of gameness against science and gameness won out. Morris was knocked to the centre of the ring and slugged it out, something being up time, they could not lift their hands and the sting was gone out of the blows. Angell is a comer and will be heard from in the big bouts providing he is not overmatched.

The whole card was thoroughly with Dickey of this city but Morris earned a draw with him in this class and the next time out Morris should take the cup. Morris is aggressive and has a close defense and against a view of Dickey's type should give good showing.

Nicolson, a two-time fighter from St. James' Athletic Club, took Stocks of Oshawa in the 147 lb. class. For two rounds Stocks had the best of the bout, but he could not weather the hard hitting of Nicolson and Nicolson in the third canto. He rushed Stocks to the ropes and pounded left and rights to the body and then over went Mary Ann to the bottom and it was curtains for Stocks. Bentley was given the decision over Barber of the Classic Athletic Club in the middleweight division but he did not have much margin.

Ripley of Oshawa and Scotty Kline of this city met again in the 147 lbs. class and the decision was given to Ripley after interesting three rounds. As long as Kline stood off and boxed he was safe from Ripley who could make headway, but at rest fight. Ripley had too much punch for him. Kline had Ripley in distress in nearly every round but the Oshawa boy would come back at the close to gain the edge. He had a haymaker in his right hand that the referee said time he hit Kline. Scotty tired from the fifth round.

The opening bout between two boys from the Classic Athletic Club was class and the decision was given to Jones

Kiwanis Club Assist Camps

Playgrounds and Baseball League Supervised by Service Boys

Chicago, April 21.—Kiwanis clubs in the United States and Canada this year are opening 300 recreational and health camps for 15,000 children," announces Horace W. Davies, of De Kalb, Illinois, president of the service organization. Most all of the camps are under the supervision of trained athletic and educational directors. Children are given free health examinations before going to these camps and the thousands of underprivileged boys and girls are also given special attention. The Red Cross Salvation Army, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and other organizations will help establish camps later in the summer, according to Kiwanis clubs.

Baseball leagues for boys, sponsored by Kiwanis clubs, will add an interest to the national sport this season. For the year, 324 Kiwanis clubs will conduct playgrounds, baseball diamonds, and are conducting general competitions, while thousands of dollars are being spent for equipment and uniforms.

In the United States and Canada, there are 373 towns and large communities, engaged in health and sanitation campaigns, and construction of hospitals, immunization work, and the establishment of free health clinics for adults, a recent survey of activities of clubs of Kiwanis International shows," states Fred C. W. Parker, executive secretary.

will be examined through the research microscope here, and by July 1 when 6,000 men from 1,251 communities in forty-eight States and Canada will be in attendance at the 24th annual convention of Kiwanis International.

Child welfare, juvenile delinquency, and vocational guidance are three subjects which will be discussed by Kiwanians after a year's work has been accomplished, by the 162,000 members.

In vocation guidance and placement, there are 863 clubs at work this year which has engaged 450 more clubs, and over 300 others are sponsoring Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops.

A preliminary survey in juvenile delinquency shows Kiwanians working with juvenile judges for plans of personal counsel and help to offenders. In a certain State of the youths who are between the ages of 12 and 15 years, this survey shows. A number of other clubs have taken the responsibility of caring for men discharged from penal institutions. Work is secured for them and their families are aided.

An effort is being made to secure Presidents Airport Beacon for convention in June.

POET LAUREATE DIES AGED 86

Dr. Robert Bridges Was Centre of Controversy Some Years Ago

LONDON, April 21. — Dr. Robert Bridges, Poet Laureate of England, died here yesterday.

Dr. Bridges, who had been Poet Laureate since 1913, was 80 years old. His works were known all over the world.

Dr. Robert Bridges, Poet Laureate of England since 1913, was regarded in two distinctly different lights by the British people; one class criticizing him for the small quantity of his work after he assumed the historic position first dates back to the days of Chaucer and the other commending him for the high-class quality of his work. He was the subject of controversy along those lines from the time hat name was first mentioned as the successor of Alfred Austin, but when his appointment finally was made by the then Prime Minister Asquith, it was officially announced that it pleased the King to give his approval of the appointment.

Dr. Bridges was born Oct. 23, 1844, and was educated at Eton and Oxford (Christ Church, Oxford). After his graduation from Oxford he travelled abroad, and upon returning to London studied medicine and practiced several years as a hospital physician in London. He gave up the practice of medicine in 1882 to devote himself to literature. He retired to a woodland hill near Oxford, and it was said that the spirit of the beautiful city had been an influence in his life and work. In his years at Oxford, Dr. Bridges took an active interest in sports, and became having stroked an Oxford College crew was a proficient performer at cricket. During his later years it was said that Dr. Bridges continued to devote several hours daily to music and to poetry. To the end of his career he took delight in writing poetry of the purest classical form, but he had a test of piety, it was said, to turn more and more to the charm and consolation of music, which he ever loved.

Dr. Bridges married Monica Waterhouse, Sept. 3, 1884. They had three children.

His last work, "The Soul of Beauty", was published recently.

Describes Life In Prison Camp to Local Club

Rev. Robert Hall Related Experiences to The Y's Men

An entirely new and interesting subject was heard by the members of the Y's Men's Club at their weekly luncheon last night. For speakers in Belleville at least, are qualified to talk on this subject, as few indeed have gone through the experiences which were touched on by Rev. Robert Hall of John Street United Church. His subject was "Behind the German Lines", this being a brief outline of some of his experiences while a prisoner in Germany during the Great War.

Along with three or four others, the speaker was captured by the German troops on the 21st of March, 1918, during a dense fog which completely concealed everything that they walked right into a whole regiment of German soldiers before they realized where they were. As the speaker declared, "it was no time to be courageous, not with some two hundred rifles levelled at you", and accordingly they surrendered immediately. After being searched they marched for four days back from the lines into enemy territory and then were herded into box-cars to be sent to Germany. Over forty men were crowded into each car, and crowded were they, that they had to sleep in relays on the floor.

After several days they arrived at Hastal, near Cologne, where thousands of Allied soldiers were prisoners, and where they were kept prior to being allotted to the various prison camps. The speaker was there for three months and then moved to a place almost on the north edge of Russia, where he spent the remaining six months of the War. The only real discomfort suffered was the lack of food, as they were given only one meal a day, and that only a bowl of thick soup which, although not in a superior way, was extremely hot in substance, with the result that most of the prisoners broke out in fever and remained that way until released.

Rev. Hall declared that before he actually came in contact with the German soldier, he was just a target to him, being entirely impersonal. But after becoming captured, he found the German soldier to be not such a bad fellow, although the people behind the lines were often cruel and bloodthirsty. The real German hate of the Allied soldiers was seen at its greatest bright far behind the lines, while the German soldier simply fought impersonally against the Allies.

The meeting last night was in charge of Art Rogers, who acted as chairman, while Jimmie Bankier, sang two songs, "Joe the Gypsy" and "I Passed By Your Window". Harold Howard rendered "The City of Hesh" and "Over Divine", while Leo Rigby, who also accompanied the singers, gave two piano solos, "The Cotton Field Dance" and "Nola".

RADIO FANS CORNER

The reception last night was just as bad as it could be and yet bring in the least bit of the programs. For while weak all evening after Amos 'n' Andy was heard. I'm not trying to hint that they had anything to do with it now. Static was banging around last night too, so taken altogether, wasn't a very nice evening.

The Mormon Choir last night gave the loveliest rendering of that beautiful old Hawaiian melody, "Aloha Oe", that I've heard in a long time. Their voices blended perfectly and with the full choir singing it made a lasting impression on those who heard it.

Featuring a medley of Russian folk songs, Alexander Kirkiloff and his balalaikali orchestra with Genia Fonariova, lyric soprano will be heard over WEAF and network in a program entitled "Trails Both at 9 o'clock tonight.

Pastrels and tangos are the pals for Don Carlos and his Marimba Band tonight to be heard over WEAF and network at 10 o'clock. While at 10.30 over WJZ Bill Daly directs the orches in the presentation of these songs and popular hits of the day.

Why, my, this University of Maine Stein song is a popular song, it is being featured again tonight during the Boint Gardeners' musical tour of the world to be broadcast at 30 over WJZ. In addition to the stein song they will play an Arizona dance, a Hungarian dance, a French pavane and a Scottish Anderson tango.

Happy Wonder Bakers present a review of Sigmund Rombert numbers tonight with the composer as guest artist at the piano. The program commences at 9.30 and is heard over WEAF.

Radio Keith Orpheum hour heard at 10.30 tonight over WEAF and they are keeping the names of those who are appearing a secret, so don't miss the program.

DIVORCE DENOUNCED AS HOME DESTROYER

KINGSTON, April 22.—A pronouncement on divorce, dealing particularly with the matter of divorce courts for Ontario, which is now before the Dominion Parliament, was made at the Masses in St. Mary's Cathedral Sunday by His Grace Archbishop H. J. O'Brien. The pronouncement urged the people to use their influence in every way to see that this abuse goes no further; to see that divorce, in whose wake are ever found the destroyed home, the deserted and neglected child and the broken family, be made not easier, but if anything, more difficult."

Members of the congregation were urged to place their views on the matter before the local members of Parliament, both of whom on previous occasions in the House have voted in favor of the divorce courts for Ontario.

GRAND OPENING SAT., APRIL 26TH CAPITOL THE GRAHAM STOCK CO. 12—People—12 Carloads of Scenery and Wardrobe

Missionary Is W.M.S. Speaker

The W.M.S. of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church held their Annual Thank Offering service on Tuesday evening, Mrs. Seymour, president of the Society, occupying the chair. A good number of the congregation were present to hear the very interesting and instructive lecture given by Dr. Cropper, returned missionary from British Guiana. This Dr. Cropper's heart is in full sympathy with the needed and his rare ability to understand the fine inner workings of the minds of the East Indians who form a large part of the population of Guiana, must assuredly be the fountain of his great success. He finds the East Indian a man of sterling qualities, true to his creed, whatever that creed may be, and able to sense the finest and highest ideas of life. Although Br. Guiana has a mixed population, gathered mostly from the hot portions of countries, they are warmly devoted to the British Empire.

Dr. Cropper declared the increase in materialism and the lack of religion of our Western Civilization.

After the lecture the Executive met at the Manse to enjoy the hospitality of Dr. and Mrs. Seymour and to have further opportunity of hearing Dr. Cropper.

From Belleville, Dr. Cropper went to address a meeting in St. Andrew's Church, Kingston.

Body of Jack Savage Found

The Ontario Intelligencer this morning, "and it would be easy to recognize the body."

Coroner Boyce decided that an inquest was unnecessary. "It was purely an accident, that happened over a month ago," he said, this morning, "and I do not think it will be necessary to hold any inquest at all."

Provincial Police Department Credit Due Fire Department

Credit is due to the Fire Department for the unceasing efforts they have put forth in an endeavour to locate the body. In March, during nasty weather they even cleared a channel through the ice to try and locate the remains and have been on watch since.

This morning at eight o'clock Fire Chief Lynch was all ready with dynamite to start blasting operations in order to try and raise the body. Some twenty sticks would have been used, and the entire water area around the park covered. These operations, of course, were found unnecessary.

A telegram was sent to Mr. Fred Savage, the father of the boy, who is in Montreal. Mr. Savage is an engineer on the Canadian National Railways and he will arrive back in the city this afternoon, when arrangements for the funeral will be completed. Although it is not yet certain, it is believed the car mine will be interred in Perth, Ontario.

A Tragic Accident

The drowning of Jack Savage was Belleville's one tragedy during the winter months. With two other boys on the evening of March 18th, around six o'clock he was playing in Victoria Park when he slipped on a cake of ice and was precipitated into the water. His two companions, instead of notifying somebody in authority immediately ran home and it was not until later that the Savage family learned of their son's demise.

From that day his father has been in the vicinity, trying to locate the body. Jack Savage was a member of the Roman Catholic faith.

They received a straight salary, the company deriving its income from a fifty-fifty cut in the gross receipts of the entertainments.

Sometimes these receipts ran as high as $900, but usually the gross was far less, and the expenses were high. The boys saw no solid future in the field to which fate had drawn them. They were ambitious. Continually they kept their eyes open for some opportunity which would promise better things.

In 1925 radio began seriously to organize itself as an art and industry. Recognizing it as a sphere which held possibilities, but not knowing what these possibilities might be, Amos 'n' Andy—we use the well known names, though at that time they were still for the most part unknown—left vaudeville and signed with the Chicago station WEBH. They worked themselves up to a commanding position in broadcasting, learning new songs and digging up gags to amuse radio audiences. Then came a great moment in history, as they will now explain to you.

"Well, folks—dis is Amos speakin'—me an' Andy is sittin' in our room in Chicago one night talkin' 'bout what we'se gonna do. We'se gotta do sumpin', else we'se gotta live on $100 a week de res' of our lives, an' dey ain't nobuddy neveh goin' git rich on an' eyrthing. So I says——"

BACKED BY THE WHOLE DOMINION

For the next few months Bellevillians will have something which will keep them minds and eyes busy—the construction of the new lower bridge.

People like to watch. Some men will watch day in and day out any operation of the kind. It is a matter of human interest to see men at work and to see a building rising step by step to its completion.

In the smallest village as in the capital city there is the same interest in work which is being done by others.

Bridge building is even more interesting to watch than the construction of buildings for bridges are not so often put up.

As the work is going on only a step from the main street, it is a safe guess that the neighborhood will have its regular crowd of spectators.

ROMANS AND GREEKS SPEAK TO US

Not long ago Queen's University Faculty Players which have been touring the civilized a dozen years in the realm of the drama put on a Greek play. Now it is reported that the British Broadcasting Company have included in their programs readings from Plato, Herodotus, and Thucydides and "Socrates", a play by Clifford Bax, has been presented on the London stage.

Are the classics which were supposed dead back to work their effect on modern civilization? Could modern civilization have a better guide than classical thought? Are the men who directed the thoughts and emotions of the ancient world to mark out the course of the present age? Or is it that modern education sees the immense value in the classics and feels that they are not valued by the public at large? There is today an immense interest in all education, whether it comes from the times of the Greeks and Romans or from modern schools of thought.

When all is said and done there must be immense stability in the minds of the students who after two thousand years and more mould thought, stir radio audiences and lead to tense moments of excitement in the twentieth century playhouse. Scholars when they think of it feel like saying of the old masters as was said of Cesar after his murder "O Cesar thou are mighty yet." But it is perhaps easily understood for the old Greeks and Romans were of the same flesh and blood as we are, they were stirred with the same emotions, suffered the same pangs, ate and drank as we do. The form of the thought was a little different but life was much the same to them. It is no wonder then to have their thoughts stirring up theatre audiences in the democratic Valley in the democratic city of London and in democratic England and Canada.

LAST YEAR'S MODELS

The Christian Science Monitor discusses the changing world we live in where new models chase one another across the stage of public approval and are soon forgotten except as curiosities. The Monitor says:

Suppose you take the latest type of automobile—parked a canny student of business trends the other day—and having hermetically sealed that car in a glass case, exhibit it with a price mark in the corridor of a hotel. The first day, that trim, shining car will attract a throng of interested spectators; some man may even offer to purchase it for the amount asked. Keep the automobile there for a month —free of dust and blemish—and the certainty is that the offer will have also lowered considerably if a buyer is to be found. And yet absolutely nothing fundamental has happened to the car.

"Keep that handsome, serviceable automobile, be continued, on display for a whole year, an the manufacturer will be fortunate to dispose of it for much more than half the original price. The reason is that the attention of the buying public is now centered on newer models equipped with all latest accessories advertised to bring beauty, comfort and speed.

"If the story of that automobile, snugly honor and kindness and cheer,

It gathers its friends where it finds them and clings to them year after year.
And whether its cottage or castle the true man may chance to abide
There shall come those dark days of disaster when he must have a friend at his side.

A Scotch and a Jewish boy had each earned a dollar.

Sandy, in accordance with his inborn frugality, was quick to deposit his in the bank.

Ikey, in accordance with his inborn business instinct, had other plans.

He went to his neighborhood drug store and had his dollar bill changed into nickles and dimes.

Then he took it to the neighborhood grocer's and got a dollar bill for it.

He repeated this manuever several times.

The druggist stood it about as long as he could. Then he called up Ikey's father, the neighborhood usurer.

He explained that Ikey had had nearly 10 dollar bills changed in his store that afternoon and thought his father ought to know his son had that much money.

Ikey was called to account by his father.

Confiding that he had only one dollar in his possession Ikey said:

"Why do I change that dollar so often? Well, someone nobody's going to make a mistake, and it ain't going to be me."

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

There was a note in his voice which warned the girl that another of Trudi's periodic proposals was due and she looked hastily at the clock, hoping her head violently.

"No! No! No! I know what I'm doing. I have a system all figured out. And if you're so set on going somewhere for me come down in the store and call a packing case. I still a dumb and I'm living smashed a finger on the darned thing!"

Below the reformed Smokerie was the store room—a dismal cemented basement lit by a single electric light. A short flight of steps led to the upper regions and when the door was open dark and musty smells breathed from it.

At night when Ardeth lay on the couch she could hear the mice scamper, and though he had ought to know his son had that much money.

Ikey was called to account by his father.

Confiding that he had only one dollar in his possession Ikey said:

"Why do I change that dollar so often? Well, someone nobody's going to make a mistake, and it ain't going to be me."

Only a couple of old teakwood tabourette she had picked up yesterday, inlaid with mother-of-pearl, a piece of black bowl of mirror black, and a white marble nymph reclining, holding in her hand a large thicket of daffodils and maiden-hair.

Her fingers were busy arranging the bowl and nymph as she placed it in the window. A gem she had picked up in an Italian importing place last week.

She went out in front to survey the result from the street, and was rewarded with someone watching from the pavement and murmured a quick apology.

Found the words drawn on her lips when the realization of who was facing Ken.

Kingston, April 19—Wung Sui Wing is shortly leaving the Kingston General hospital to go to China to rejoin there are, family after a very distressing stay in hospitals here. Mr. Wing, a Chinaman connected a laundry in Montreal, was in a side-swiping collision of two fast night trains on the Canadian National Railways near Kingston Junction on the morning of September 29 of last year. Among the others injured was he taken to the Hotel Dieu hospital, where it was discovered he had a broken leg. He was treated, but it was found that the bone would not set. On December 19 last, he was transferred to the General hospital and has been there since. He is able to get around with crutches and now feels that he can travel to his home.

His lawyers, in Kingston, have made a satisfactory settlement with the railway authorities. He can live quite comfortably on his return to China. A son will remain in Montreal to carryon his father's business.

FASHION FANCIES
TRIMMING IS HAND DRAWN

A fine hand is seen playing a part in the trimming of the new frocks. Details of embroidery, fine stitching, hand-drawn work are all delicate refinements of the first touch of summer. Even sports models are expressing this theme that has always been the prerogative of femininity.

Illustrating a clever way of handling the dainty idea in a purely sporting manner is the sleeveless dress sketched above. It is of white, flat crepe and features hand-drawn work on the blouse and skirt. The petal color dog below are also used with the best fashion authority, while the pleated peplum and skirt flounce remarks the current interest in pleated effects. A colorful note is added by a little cardigan jacket of bright wool crepe, which if slipped on would reveal a scarf collar of white.

BETTER BRAN FLAKES

DEAR READERS:

Have you a corner in your home, either in your bedroom or perhaps the living room which almost calls out an invitation to rest and, be sure every time you go near it? If you haven't I know you will want one, and I am going to help you a little right now and tell you just how to go about making one. I hope you have a window in your room dear reader, because this helps to make the cozy corner much more attractive, but if you haven't why we will not worry about it at all, but go right ahead with our plans. First of all we will consider the young girls' bedroom, a place where she often entertains her girl friends, the modern girl should be proud of her dainty bedroom, and if she is the owner of a cozy nook where she and her friends may discuss their many interests from yesterday's afternoon tea to her last dashing cavalier, her pride is doubly justified. Now then, dear reader, if you have a space beneath your window for this cozy corner, start working at once. The foundation work may be accomplished with the assistance of either your father or big brother, and simply consists of a low platform of boards extending about twelve inches on each side of the window and a comfortable height from the floor, for sitting purposes. Next obtain a piece of mattressing which fits the top, rayon, chintz, or whatever material you have used in the hangings in your room, should be chosen to use on your corner. A slip cover of the material is next made to fit the mattress, and a valance to match is sewn all around the top edge, reaching to the floor. Your corner is now complete except for the cozy cushions, almost the most important part in the whole scheme. Choose your cushions with care, remembering to match their pattern and colour with your curtains and bedding. Choose the softest and fluffiest, pile them high and be sure to have at least four, and presto! Your corner is complete, and if it does not look inviting, gay and cosy my name is not Lucille! Give it a try dear reader, you will never know how you managed without it once it is yours. If your mother is also looking for the scheme try a corner in the room. A delightful effect can be achieved by taking advantage of the two separate walls.

Fashionably yours,
"LUCILLE"

UPPER ROOM

He who thinks
To an upper room,
Who trades all ready
With mop and with broom,

Who cleans the paces
Till no stains mar
A view of eyes
Of morning star,

Who lays his hearth
And lights with trust,
And bets a loaf
Of golden crust,

Who draws a fresh water
And spreads a table
As white and fair
As he is able,

Let him rejoice;
A humble board,
An upper room
Received our Lord.

PLACES FOR GUESTS OF HONOR

By Mrs. Cornelius Beekman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1. I am going to have a luncheon for twelve guests including two guests of honor, engaged girls. How shall I set these two guests of honor without offending either? My table is oval.

2. Is it proper to have candles on a luncheon table and a crepe paper centrepiece with corresponding paper cups?

E.K."

Seat the guests of honor next to you, one on the right and one on the left. If one is, perhaps, a bit older than the other, seat the older one on your right. Or, if you wish to give the more honored seat on your right to the one whom you have known longer, this will be correct. As a matter of fact, since you are honoring both, neither one will, I am sure, see any distinction between them as to seating arrangement.

2. It is better form not to have candles on a luncheon table. However, sometimes when there is otherwise not enough light, we do use candles. But they should not be used for the luncheon table if we can avoid it.

Instead of a crepe paper centrepiece it is better taste to use a glass or silver or pottery bowl to hold the floral centrepiece, and use silver or glass nut cups.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

Debutantes for Court Increase

King and Queen Will Hold Five Courts to Receive Society's Elect

London, April 22—Five courts are to be held this year by the King and Queen because of the great rush of applicants for presentations. Women are more anxious than ever to be included this year in the Lord Chamberlain's lists, as the King will be present in person. Last year he was not sufficiently recovered to act at the Courts, and his place was taken by the Prince of Wales.

Debutantes from America and the Dominion figure largely in the lists. The reappearance of the King at the Royal Courts will make this year's season one of the most memorable since the war. Already fashionable dressmakers have received orders for Court dresses, and "curtsy classes" for debutantes are starting.

This year a new departure has been made in the dates of the courts. Four are to be in May and only at the beginning of July, none in June. Only once in recent years has there been a court in July, and that was in 1926.

FLYING TO ENGLAND

SYDNEY, Australia, April 21.—Two Australian aviators took off from Wyn ham at 5.15 a.m. Sunday in an attempt to fly from Australia to England.

This is England's coldest and wettest Easter for a decade. Snow fell for two hours in Leicestershire yesterday.

The Beauty Box

Natural blushes are rare. The modern girl hasn't got them and that is why the rouge madness started. With present-day interest in outdoor life, which no doubt will increase as the years roll by, the lovely bona fide color tint of the cheeks may be restored. It is the product of perfect health, active circulation of the blood, and proper functioning of the internal organs of the body. Rosey cheeks are produced by the expansion of the small capillaries directly under the skin surface. If the circulatory system is sluggish or digestion impaired, the capillaries go on strike.

Brassieres should never be worn tight. Binding the breasts interferes with the expansion of the lungs and hinders the muscles of the chest. To reduce the size of the bust go in for those exercises that move the arms vigorously, pulling on the ligaments of the upper portion of the body. Rowing, swimming, bowling and tennis are good.

When the body posture is correct, the neck—that isthmus between the head and body—is benefited and assumes more perfect lines. Collar bones disappear entirely when the backbone has the proper inward curve, the head is carried sprightdily and the chest held high. An alert, invigorating carriage keeps the mind vitalized and spirits on tip toe.

The back of the neck requires careful attention when scrubbing goes on. Dust settles there, especially if one works at a desk with the head forward. It is a favorite landing spot for boils and other infections, and the frictions of cost collars makes the skin surface susceptible to germs that are looking for leaseholds.

APRIL ESCAPADE

"Don't burn your hand, darling. Why of course it's doing the wrong, no matter how safe it looks, that is the sin don't you see it now? And doing the right thing is always right, no matter how bad it looks!"

"But you oughtn't to give scandal, ought you, Mary Kate?" Tess asked conscientiously.

Her dark face was flushed to gipsy beauty as she stirred some creamy compound in a saucepan. She appealed to the infallible authority.

"It's wrong to set a bad example, even if what you're doing isn't what it looks like isn't it, Mother?"

"Don't let that catch on the button," was Mrs. O'Hara's mysterious reply. Tess recommenced her arrested stirring briskly. "Where's Tom?"

"Tom was here after school and he went out, and he said he'd be back!" some one supplied. They all sat down Mary suddenly appearing in their midst from upstairs, looking clean and neat, and weary.

"Lecture tonight, Mrs?"

"Yep. Anyone see my yellow fountain pen?"

"I saw the sort of orange one, Mart, you had it."

"It's Tom's big one. I gave it to myself. A man came into the office yesterday then forty cents—your potato, Mary Kate."

"Gee, I'm tired. I'm awful fond of you, Mary Kate," Mart said wearily and sleepily.

"Mother, can I go 'round to Kelly's?" Tom muttered.

"I don't know why you'd want to work in that dirty garadge nights, when you don't do your lessons," his mother objected. The boy's face grew dark.

"I hate those dam lessons!" he said mildly.

"Out it out," Mart directed him briefly.

"Cursin' will get you nowhere," his mother added.

Mary Kate felt a little pang of pity for clumsy dirty, solitary Tom. He always seemed out of things somehow —against the current. She wished that it was his arm that was about her, and that her head was against his cheek, instead of Mart's, Tom was always hungry for popularity. Everyone loved Mart, everyone praised him.

From sheltered into the dining room whence a shrill cry through which the word "pencil" made itself heard now and then, announced that he had joined the students. Cass appeared at the outside door, and Martin roused himself and started off for his eight o'clock lecture. Mary Kate slipped into an enveloping apron and dealt so expertly with the kitchen disorder that before her caller had been ten minutes in the room she was wiping the dark red surface of the table with damp cloth, the chairs already slipped against the walls, and the new linoleum brushed clean of crumbs.

Proceeding to wipe dishes with a soft old immaculate towel that had once been a flour bag, Mary Kate regaled Cass with the usual bits of office and family gossip; her mother's tiresome washing, as appreciative a listener as was he. She seemed to both the others more than ordinarily sweet and amusing tonight—such a tall, swift, graceful creature, so radiant, so turned upside down on the warm stove the big yellow bowl soaked in cold water until the last grain of raw meal was gone, and rinsed in hot water to get the easier. The mixing spoon, the teapot, were cleaned and put away, and the wooden potato masher that Tom used to play with as a doll, letting it stand tilted on its wooden base, on the kitchen floor that was his first world. All done, once more as it must all be done more than a thousand times a year, and the dish rags spread neatly on the smooth sink to dry, and the towels hung on the wooden arms over the stove.

"So you really go to Sacramento tomorrow night, Mary Kate?"

"Looks like it!"

"And are you thrilled?"

"Oh, thrilled to death!"

"What time do you get there?"

"Well, I'm not sure, Cass."

"I tell her," said Mrs. O'Hara, "that she ought to take her suitcase down to the office with her tomorrow. Then in case it was a little easier than she thought, she could get away."

Mary Kate looked at her seriously. "I'm going to do that, Mother."

"I don't think the train goes until eight," Cass said. "I'll come 'round here tomorrow night about six, say and if you're here I can take you down!"

"Do that." It was all so easy! Unconsciously, they were all helping.

"And, when do you get back Mary Kate?"

"Sunday morning."

"More househunting Sunday afternoon, huh?"

"Oh, surely!"

And how she would enjoy it, she thought, with all that money safe in the bank for Mart, and the adventure safely over, and everything straight and normal again.

The clock hands moved on, and Cass rose, and Mary Kate pulled on her hat and got into bed. But not to sleep.

It was a new experience, lying awake, quietly and helpfully, hour after hour. If one could not sleep, one simply could not sleep. Sleep was not a right, it was a mysterious and blessed providence, night after night. Strange things, to fall asleep. And strange thing to be lying in bed, and not to fall asleep.

Toward morning she fell off, uneasily, to dream distressedly of missing trains, strange places and faces, of dining somewhere with Christopher Stayne and a lot of other vague figures—only, most embarrassingly to be in her nightgown! They were all in formal evening attire, and Mary Kate, in her dreams, kept trying to imply that her own flimsy, peach-colored garment was perfectly orthodox.

She started up, unrested and feverish, in the dawn, and was the first of the big family astir. The clock's hands were moving again, moving through office hours—through lunch time—four o'clock—two o'clock.

She was at the telephone, her heart thumping, her hands icy.

"Mother, darling, this is Mary Kate, Mother, I have to leave now, so I'll say good-bye until late to-morrow—"

"Oh, are you going so early, darlin'? There's not one of the boys home could come down and see you off—"

"Oh that's all right!" Just say good by to everyone."

"And God bless you dearie. Have a safe time!"

And so to hang up the office receiver feeling like a murderer, and pick up the bag, and button the coat, and pull down the little brown hat. Everything ready. It would take only ten minutes to get to the train. Four-forty one night as well be going.

Mary Kate had recovered little. The big station excited her.

"Sanfrancisco?"

"Track three."

That was all there was to it. She looked from the train windows upon a world of spring. Her heart danced. At this time tomorrow she would be safe at home, ready for confession and absolution, and Mart should have his trip to Germany.

And, anyway, there was nothing wrong in all this. It was all a joke. It was all fun.

CHAPTER XV

After all there was nothing so terrifying about it. There was nothing alarming about riding quietly, interestedly, down to San Jacinto neighborhood, looking out of the car windows with all the pleasure of that strange adventure. There was no reason why a tall girl in a belted brown coat and fur hat should not get up and stretch when the conductor said "Burlingame!" and join the moving line in the aisle.

And on the platform was Christopher Stayne, his strike and business like, taking her suitcase away from her, glancing at her in satisfaction. "Everything serene?"

"Oh yes, so far!"

He laughed at the rather uncertain tone; Mary Kate had to laugh herself.

The reassuring afternoon sun was shining, and down here on the sweet green country everything smelled sweet.

She got into the car, put her feet up in front of her, settled herself in pleasant expectancy.

"Not so bad, eh?" Christopher Stayne said, taking his own seat beside her, leaning across her to try the right-hand door, and putting his glove on the wheel.

"So far!" she admitted again, with an easier laugh.

Their way lay across the highway, streaming with cars that flashed and hummed endlessly, in the long afternoon shade and sun, and up through great brick gates toward the foothills.

"That's the club," Chris said her, indicating it with a jerk of his fair, uncovered head. "Know that place? That's the Belcher place—"

"I don't know of any of them!" She studied the beautiful, gardened, the shining windows and low roofs with obvious approval.

"Is this us", she asked interestedly, when he turned sharply in at a certain oak-guarded garden gate.

"This is us."

"Isn't it darling!"

"It's small. But it's one of the show places of the Peninsula."

Mary Kate thought it might well be. Her heart beat high for sheer pleasure in its beauty as she descended from the car, and followed her host, through a gilded gate in a creamy wall into the patio.

It was a Spanish house, quite new, but cleverly simulating age. The product of peasant laborers might have put it together in some village lying on the hills near old Toledo, three hundred years before. There was a fascinating simplicity, a certain clumsiness and irregularity about its adobe walls, and the angles of its colapsing roof-line, of fading pink tiles. No two of the windows were alike in size or position, some had heavy shutters of weather-beaten green-gray planks; some were narrow, with twisted iron bars protecting them.

In the wide, tropically scented patio at the end of this drowsing spring day water was splashing sleepily in an old stone fountain, under whose wire lily pads little red fish shot to and fro. A great banana palm, opposite the gateway, flung tremendous fans of delicate green against the adobe wall. From the left of the entrance a narrow cloister, outlined in slender white-painted poles, ran back to a hooded doorway, underfoot moss spurted green between the irregular, up-tilted tiles. Doves were walking on the low roof, twisting their trimly groomed little white and gray bodies, pouring their heart-breaking chord of sorrow into the peaceful air.

Chris led the way into the dim shad ows of the interior, gratefully cool on this warm airless afternoon. Mary Kate, speechless with the deep satisfaction of discovered beauty, saw narrow, arched doorways, fine, tiled stairways rising up against bare, soft walls, niches where Spanish saints stood stiffly under crowns of tarnished stars, a great fireplace with a wrought iron crane, a bit of balcony from which hung a tattered scrap of mellow old brocade.

"Will you put my cousin in the guest room, Peter?" Chris said to a middle-aged woman who was carrying Mary Kate's bag. "It's now ten minutes to six—we ought to leave at ten minutes to eight," he told his guest. "I've got to go over to the club, so make yourself entirely at home. There are books— there's a radio over there."

Shot from Guns

125 million food cells exploded

That's what makes Puffed Grains crisp . . . delicious . . . virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals

YOU may have wondered why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are so light and crunchy . . . so melingly good to eat.

Here's the secret. They are made by an utterly different process from all other ready-to-eat cereals. Grains of wheat and rice are sealed in bronze guns. The guns are revolved in fiery ovens. In this terrific heat the natural grain moisture in each tiny food cell expands into steam.

When the guns are fired, 125 million explosions occur in each grain. Every tiny food cell is completely broken up. (Just as it would be from long hours of cooking.) Hence every particle of food is completely digestible. This is why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are rated as virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals.

When these grains come forth in showers from the guns, they've been puffed to 8 times normal size. They're crisp, fragile, crunchy . . . deliciously good to eat. They taste like sweet new nuttiness. Like fresh buttered popcorn. You'll say you never before dreamed that wheat and rice could be so melingly good to eat.

Don't neglect to give your family this more delicious . . . more richly nourishing cereal. Order Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice from your grocer today. 9784

Steel's Stores in Interim Receivership

Meeting On War Memorial Adjourns Until Tuesday Next

G. T. CLARKSON WILL CARRY ON BUSINESS OF 22 STORES FOR CONSERVATION COMPANY ASSETS

Secretary Treasurer Says Company Indebted $100,000

CREDIT REQUIRED

Twenty Two Branches, of Which Belleville Is One Involved

Toronto, April 23 —(Special to Ontario Intelligencer)—Steel's Stores Ltd. with 22 departmental stores in Ontario and Quebec were put into the hands of an interim receiver G. T. Clarkson by order of W. J. Redley, Registrar in Bankruptcy at Osgoode Hall today. Mr. Clarkson was authorized to carry on the business of the company in order to conserve its assets in the interests of the creditors until some other disposition is made. The order was made on the petition of four creditors Cassidy's Limited, Nerlich and Company, Monarch Knitting Co. Ltd., and Woodies Emerson Ltd. Charles E. Mackenzie, secretary treasurer of Steele's Ltd., says in an affidavit that his company is indebted to the trade in respect of overdue liabilities totalling $100,000.00 which is at present impossible to pay. He states that the credit of the company is so impaired that it is impossible to obtain merchandise for sale in the 22 stores which credit is made available and that unless such credit is obtained, the business of the company will be jeopardized. The normal business of the company at this season of the year is affirmed to be $150 000. which would require purchases totalling $100,000. of said $50.000 is needed, $5,000. to purchase goods for sale.

Besides the appointment of a receiver with power to borrow this necessary $50,000 and to carry on the business, in a second affidavit Amos Rushell, office manager, of Steele's Ltd, says he has been informed Steel's Stores has $28 000 in cash in its credit in the various banks and that he believes the capital stock is in the hands of Steel's Stores Inc. in the United States now in bankruptcy. He expresses fear that the assets, which are disseminated among the 22 stores will be dissipated to the prejudice of the creditors if an interim receiver is not appointed. Steel's Stores Ltd. has branches in the following Ontario cities and towns: Toronto, Hamilton, Oshawa, Owen Sound, Welland, Kitchener, Oak. Brantford, Ottawa, Belleville, Peterboro, Cornwall, Kingston and in the province of Quebec in Montreal, Verdun, Three Rivers, Chicoutimi and Quebec.

WARDEN WOULD HAVE BEEN KILLED IN PRISON SAYS CHAPLAIN

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 23.—CP— Opinion that Warden Preston E. Thomas would have been killed had he entered the prison yard during the disastrous fire Monday night was expressed today by Rev. Father Albert O'Brien, Catholic Chaplain. The prison chaplain, corroborating on fact that the warden had ordered his chief deputy to take charge inside, and himself took command outside to prevent any possible movement of the thousand convicts, said: "If Warden Thomas had stepped inside the walls at the preliminary stage of the pandemonium of fire, he surely would have been killed. Those men had no hope of escape. AULD LANG SYNE SUNG BY INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY

James Maxton Breaks Down Under Tribute From Conference

NO "RED FLAG" SUNG

Birmingham, April 23 (CP)—Singing of "Auld Lang Syne" rather than "The Red Flag" as usually other Socialist song and the passage of a warm vote of thanks to James Maxton, their leader, marks the concluding meeting of the Independent Labor Party conference today. Maxton has a trifling tone in the heat of parliamentary debate, but he broke down when he rose to reply to the vote of thanks. He took to his chair with tears streaming down his cheeks, while from every side cheers of "Come on, Jimmy, we'll try it again."

Finally Marion rose and said: "I have been an emotional and sentimental fool. Your very hearty thanks broke down the little bit of nerve I had left. In the last ten or twelve months it has been hard work. I have had to seem to be in antagonism to the cause to which I have devoted a big proportion of my life."

"I have had to concentrate on me from all quarters a terrible concentration of criticism. I feel that at this conference the I. L. P. has decided our object is the achievement of a Socialist common wealth and not a mere poli'cal expedient and opportunism. I think we will all sing "Auld Lang Syne," rather than "The Red Flag" or anything else," he concluded.

MEMORIAL ARCHES TO WAR DEAD PROPOSED AT BRIDGE ENTRANCES SECOND MEETING WILL BE HELD

Small Attendance at Last Night's Meeting Leads to Another Meeting

OTHER PLANS MOOTED

Citizens' Opinion is Sought by Council Before Action Taken

Whether or not a memorial to the sacred dead of the Great War will be built in connection with the new bridge across the Moira River now under construction, is still in abeyance, after a public meeting of the citizens was held last night in the city hall, Mayor George A. Reid presiding. General opinion was shown in the matter and on the suggestion of one in attendance another public meeting will be called on Tuesday Sunday next, at which time all denominations will be asked to announce the same from their pulpits on Sunday or the week previous. There were only 35 citizens present, when Mayor Reid called the meeting to order, and some of these left before the meeting was closed. James O. Calloway acted as secretary, taking down the minutes of the meeting. Only three women were present.

Memorial Needed

The consensus of opinion expressed by returned men and private citizens, that there was a need of some permanent memorial to the memory of the city, submitted a large pencil sketch of two proposed arches to be built at each end of the bridge, one on either from the structure. These arches are 27 feet and will extend over the pedestrian walk on each side. The bridge is 24 feet in entire width in 24 feet the

GYPSY BAND CHASED

On Saturday last a band of thirty Gypsies arrived in Belleville from the west, travelling in Hudson and Cadillac automobiles. After giving this city the once over and no doubt noticing the birth and handsome policemen they decided to keep on travelling. At Brockville they pitched tents in the tourist camp, St. Lawrence Park, and while the men lolled about the women proceeded to make' maxims before they got smoked out; and consequently invaded the town with the old fortune telling trick and "making your money grow" racket. The police got busy and ordered the lot to leave town. Many complaints have come from Western Ontario of shady work on the part of gypsies and people getting separated from their money by these quick change artists.

The bride entered the room on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. V. Booth of Oshawa. The bride wore a gown of beige lace with the popular uneven hemline, and a rose coloured slip. She carried a bouquet of Sweet Peas.

Miss Marguerite Mills, sister of the bride was bridesmaid, and was prettily attired in tender taffeta. Her bouquet was of pale pink and white carnations.

the city by-law." On his plea of guilty he was fined $10.00 on each charge and costs.

On the charge of issuing a forged document on April 8th, pleaded not to be genuine and to the prejudice of Mr. Reid, Frank Ward, His Worship dismissed the charge on the request of the Crown Attorney and on a further charge of the same nature a remand of one week was granted the accused.

Mr. C. A. Cameron, who appeared for Mr. Wells, offered no complaint that the coal checks scales be kept open until six o'clock during the winter months and that in order to allow dealers to deliver all orders for the day, it was necessary to the court there was no evidence or charges that short weight was given on either of the loads not weighed over the scales.

Mr. Wells elected summary trial to the charge of having pleaded not guilty and Mrs. Aikens to whom the coal on Lake 2977 was sold was called as a first witness. She admitted receiving that ticket and Gerald Reid was the driver who has stated that according to his records ticket 2977 was used by the Conger Coal Company. Mr. Donnan asked the witness if he ever had book books bearing the same serial number and Mr. Reid answered with an emphatic "no." In cross examination by Mr. Cameron the witness admitted that one book had an original slip in yellow instead of white. Mr. Cameron suggested that the slip might have been made by Mr. Reid for the witness and then changed and the witness agreed with the suggestion.

In summing up the case Mr. Cameron stated that a document has been shown to be in circulation but there is no evidence that Wells was in any way to blame. There has been an attempt to show the slip was received by Wells in a fraudulent way but again there is no evidence to support this suggestion." Mr. Donnan in summing up stated there was evidence that a duplicate book was in circulation and "I am not concerned with this particular case and as the evidence is purely technical would ask for a dismissal but wish an enlargement on the other charges before the court."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

OLD-FASHIONED

by

Y. E. Kates

Copyright, 1930, International Features Service, Inc

Nancy held her head high as she drove the old-fashioned buggy down the street. She knew that as she rode along the shop-lassies grinned at her, pedestrians stared, and some of her old friends laughed outright. She knew that the horse and buggy were as obsolete as the wooden Indian, that driving it classified her as an old maid, eccentric and ridiculous, that her days of associating with youth and gayety and rathskeller hilarities were gone.

But she didn't care, she often told herself bitterly. It's them ridicule her laugh at her, ignore her. She would drive that buggy till the cows came home, and as proudly as a queen, if by doing so it helps her Aunt Carrie be happy.

Her Aunt Carrie was all she had to live for. Her Aunt Carrie had mothered her, raised her, sent her to college. She had given freely of her labor and her love, and now, old and feeble, she sat quietly by the window, or rode in the buggy beside Nancy.

Nancy could have bought a Stutzer, or even a handsome sports model like the one in which Jean McIlwain, the banker's daughter, dashed about. But Aunt Carrie was old-fashioned. To her, a car was still the machination of the devil.

So Nancy drove the buggy with her Aunt Carrie bundled beside her, and when Harry Wellingham, the young doctor, smiled at her with something more than friendliness in his eyes, she ran him cold, flicked her whip, and drove by with a look of her head.

With smiling lips but stormy eyes she started the buggy ahead before her. "So he laughs too," she thought. "Let him laugh. Let them all laugh. I wouldn't exchange this horse for every young dandy in town. And that's that!"

But two years rolled down her cheeks and for a moment the street was a blur.

It was not long after, that Aunt Carrie took her last ride, this time not in the old-fashioned buggy behind Nancy, but in a black, gloomy, horseless car, which took her to a little row of many stone crosses and returned without her.

Then it was that Nancy felt so desolate, so forsaken, so all alone that she could not bear to stay at home. She searched for, and made inquiries of acquaintances, left her name with employment agencies.

And then, one day, she met Dr. Wellingham on the street with Polly.

"I'm sorry," he told her, "about your aunt."

She bowed, choked suddenly with emotion.

"I can't be lonesome for you now," he went on sympathetically, squirming inwardly with the feeling that he was saying the wrong thing.

"I can't stay at home," Nancy burst out. "I'm looking for work."

The young doctor's face lit up.

"The very thing," he exclaimed. "I need a nurse for Polly. Would you care to?"

And so he hired her, and Nancy went to bed that night in a queer rage.

"Secretary to a doctor," she told herself. "Clerk, carry, old maid, unmarriageable, on the shelf, beyond the temptation of youth, companion to—I ought to wear shell-rimmed spectacles and drive a buggy. That's what he wanted. I know as he hired me. I'll show him!"

The next morning she went to her new job in a spirit of perverseness, dressed with care, her gayety eyes covered by heavy shell-framed glasses, her hair drawn tightly back, her clothes prim and proper.

For months she drove the buggy to work. She sat at her desk in the doctor's office with old-fashioned dignity, stiffnecked and uncompromising. She frowned when the doctor laughed, ignored his friendly advances, and lowered her eyes whenever he looked at her.

One dark evening as she started for home she heard the doctor call to her, and pulling the horse to the curb, she waited.

"I'm going your way," he said running up. "Won't you give me a lift?"

She gasped in amazement.

"You want to ride in the buggy?" she exclaimed

But he was already on the seat beside her and taking the reins from her unresisting hands, he drove on, in the direction of home.

She stared at him quizzically. He was grinning like a little stern, frightening.

"You're going the wrong way," she ventured timidly.

"I'm going in the right way," he contradicted sternly.

Then they turned into a more frequently lane, and Wellingham hailed him with a jerk of the reins. Then Polly, with a squeal of delight, sprang into the seat between them.

"Do you really hate me, Nancy," he asked suddenly, his deep voice tender, anxious.

"Why, no—why I—I——" Nancy stammered, flushing hotly, her heart beating a furious rhythm.

His hand closed firmly over hers. She averted her eyes.

"I—I love you," he said in a low voice that quivered as his professional manner struggled desperately to control his ardor. "And all I ask, Nancy, is that you like me just a little bit. Let me be your friend. You have no one, and—and," he broke off, at a loss for words.

Suddenly Nancy jerked her hand away, and with a quick movement tore the goggles from her face and sent them crashing upon the floor. She then smiled a sweet and tender smile that revealed her very soul, and the doctor, staking everything upon what he saw in her glowing eyes took her in his arms.

"You are the old-fashioned doctor," she said, after a while, "to make love in a buggy."

He laughed happily, and picking up the reins, started the horse on a slow trot for home.

"What," he asked, his hand locked in hers, "could be more ideal?"

Memorial Arches at Lower Bridge

is only 66 feet of a right-of-way to work on. The bridge will only have to be shifted from the proposed angle more to the south at the west end to allow the completion of the arches. The proposed arches lie in the neighborhood of $18,000 with another $4,000 to complete the foundations. In figuring the bridge with flood lights, the effect could be obtained and these would create a very impressive lit up thing as the boat passes through. The memorial arches could not be placed in a more advantageous position, it was said, owing to the tourist traffic which has to pass over the bridge during the next few months.

Council Awaits Citizens

Mayor Reid, in opening the meeting emphatically stated that the council were not prepared to take any action unless it was in line with all citizens. Expressing his own views on the matter he said he was opposed to the disfigurine of the bridge being altered in any way and if the plans of the people's arches be accepted, Mr. Cornick, consulting engineer of the bridge should be called in immediately. The ship wanted to see a memorial erected to the fallen dead, but four times as much material has been proposed and each time the expense had been doubled. Essentially, now is an opportune time," said Mayor Reid, "but the procedure to take in the question now before the meeting. By the number that are present little interest is manifest and as usual it is left for a few to do and the responsibility is back and grumble."

Suggestions Made

A number of suggestions, including William Day, president of the Canadian Legion, Sergt. Albert E. Baldwin, Mrs. Arthur Thompson and Mrs. Hall spoke on the subject and hoped that something would be done. They were in sympathy with the arch idea on the bridge but were of the opinion that also a shaft should be erect ed. They suggested that the property known as the Rose property and the other buildings on the south side of the west end of the bridge be purchased and Panter's Park extended up to Dundas street, thereby giving the memorial. John Elliott, one who has had the welfare of the returned men at heart, was another speaker on the matter, concisely expressing his views. "Belleville has failed miserably to do its duty to the returned men and to the glorious dead and to immortal worthy of their high courage, should be erected in the city and as soon as possible," said Mr. Elliott. Mr. Hall was in favor of something more than the present and from what I have heard from citizens I am encouraged for consideration it is the best idea that has been put forth since the beginning. We are willing to help him in any way and it is high time we were doing something the same as every city and hamlet in the Dominion has done."

For All Time

A. B. Chilton, ex-alderman and city solicitor, stated the matter was a delicate subject to discuss. "The question is, therefore, some to be decided do people build memorials?" Is it to perpetuate the memory of those who they lived and died for that we might not be grossly ungrateful, and why is it a reminder not only to ourselves, but to the generations coming after. What changes will take place in locomotion in the next fifty years for bridges are designed to decay. We are always looking for the next fifty years, but for centuries to come to commemorate the deeds of those, who heroically died. Is not one sufficient of the people have the endorsation of the entire people and not a few. I think that this meeting with its small number present should make a suggestion or go on record for or against or disproving any design submitted."

Other Proposals

"This is four times," said Ald. Wood ley, "that it has been proposed. The council gave the Memorial Hall, then came the suggestion of building on the Armouries and now it is on Memorial Park on Station street, and I see there are two proposed memorial arches for the bridge. I was against erecting a memorial on the Armouries lawn for the Government would not give sufficient of the property and to put arches in front of the Armouries building would be a difficult procedure owing to the shortage of space. The bridge now is nearly 54 feet in width and the road only 36 feet."

Alderman F. R. Wotten stated there was no memorial in the city and the bridge to the new Memorial would make a dignified place for a memorial and a place where the memorial would be outstanding. He likewise Mr. Thomson, the architect, for his efficient services during the discussion and said that the design proposed by the architect is the most favorable scheme that has ever been proposed in the city and should be adopted.

Not Memorial Bridge

"The bridge is not a memorial one," said W. B. Deacon, "but the arches as proposed would commemorate the soldiers who fell. The council may not push the matter and I would suggest that the veterans have a meeting and suggest what should be done in the matter."

Ex-Mayor W. H. Panter was of the opinion that the arches would be a fitting memorial and there was no more fitting or opportune time than the present.

O. Harold Hobson approved of the proposed arches and said they would make Belleville unique as all the great cities of the world had memorial arched their soldiers by arches, Washington, London and Paris being quoted as examples. Robert Templeton said he was disappointed at the small roll of the crowd and believed the city had fallen down on a vital matter. "The idea of a memorial arch is the right idea," said Mr. Templeton, "and I believe Royal Military College at Kingston. There were a superabundance of colonels, majors, captains and lieutenants, when the war was in progress, but all are conspicuous tonight by their absence."

A short discussion followed and the motion put by Mr. Elliott to hold another meeting in a week the same to be announced in pulpits at next Sunday services, was passed and the meeting adjourned.

Easter Thank Offering Meeting at John Street

The Easter thank-offering meeting of the W. A. of John St. United Church was held in the church hall, on Thursday April 17. Mrs. Cook presided and opened the service with hymn "Breathe on me, Breath of God." Scripture reading from the 37th Chap. of Ezekiel and prayer by Rev. R. Hall. A pleasing solo was given by Mrs. Riggs "Behind the Master Passing by." Mrs. Cook then introduced the speaker of the evening. Miss Garrett of West China, the subject be ing "Morning on the hills of Ocano." the eastern field of her visit to Africa, the description of the journey from Cape Town to Angola west Africa, was interesting and amusing, going on to say "the night is passed, it's morning on the hills of ocano," showing the sunshine of ocano," showing the contrast between dirty years ago by the congregational church now carried on by the United Church of Canada, Christianity and civilization has not belittled with admiration for those who have given their lives in this splendid work. Miss Garrett closed her address with prayer and an earnest appeal for more help. Vote of thanks was tendered to Miss Garrett for her splendid and inspiring address, on behalf of Mrs. Fairbairn and Mrs. Davis. The offering was then received after the singing of hymn "Hail, the Voice of Jesus crying," the meeting closed with the benediction by Rev. R. Hall. Refreshments of tea, buns served and a social half hour enjoyed.

Meaning a little..empty automobeel standing in front of a cigar store with so much dry mud on it you couldnt hardly tell what color it was in case you wanted to know.

Giving me a leber, and I sed, Well hey, I dont see nothing fierce about it and when the man comes out and sees the differnce he'll be so glad he'll give us each a quarter for nothing.

Which we started to do, picking up 2 sticks out of the street and starting to scrape the mud off, and after about 15 minuits we had it all scraped off of one side, leaving a big hole in the middle and proving the automobeel was unbalanced the same as when you come out of the cigar store with a big cigar in his mouth and about 6 more sticking out of his coat pocket, which is the way Hall Caine describes a writer.

Leave my site, you hideous little insecks, you poisonous little microbes, you useless little encumbrances on the face of the earth, and leave it.

Being nothing but a lot of insulta. Me and Puds walked away and found out anering back anyway, on account of realizing we had made a mistake.

HIS SENSE OF DUTY

Canada's centenarian senator, the Hon. Casimir Dessaulles, who died of excitement and shock following the burning of his home at St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, has been highly praised by those who knew him best. He was not often heard in the Red Chamber but he was faithful in his attendance.

Senator Dessaulles was in this regard a type of many men. Though he was prominent and important enough to win a seat in the Senate he did not place himself always before the people. He was content like Milton who said: "They also serve who only stand and wait."

It is a delight to meet people who are willing to play their part in the world but do so contentedly and quietly. They are those who stand ready to serve, they are content to wait. There is more heroism in that than in declaiming to the Senate and holding one's self before the nation's eyes.

This same quiet attachment to his duties which the late senator showed was indicated in his love for his home. Excitement was serious to a man of his age but the blow of the loss of his home was doubtless a more serious blow to his frame.

OUT OF THE PAST

The law is said to have a long memory, its eye is never closed in sleep. He a crime a quarter of a century old, some clue may be followed leading to the discovery of the supposed criminal.

Man has a long memory. He often remembers things from the past which might better be forgotten for the peace of mind of other people. His memory is like fate.

Old newspapers have more than memory. Memory requires some current of thought to lead it back through an association of ideas to some event long distant. But the paper needs no memory. There is the impression which needs no association of ideas to set it at work. If one leafing over an ancient page comes across a story of the long ago, there it is as written and as viewed by the reporter of half a century ago just as if written yesterday. Some of these stories do not carry any pangs but some might in the case of descendants in the event of the story having been one in which an ancestor figured not too wisely, but too truly indeed.

Every mental impression is left on the mind but this impression is subject to moulding, it may almost forgotten but not so the ancient page which while preserved is an ever present record of facts long since.

RIGHTS OF INMATES

The destruction of a portion of the Ohio State penitentiary at Columbus with the loss of 317 lives is one of the greatest calamities of modern times. These men were caught in their cells and snuffed out by smoke and flame. The imagination staggers before the picture of horrors. Dante in his inferno could not have conceived of a more awful scene than that which met the eyes of the doomed men.

The burning of the prison whether incendiary in origin or not brings forcibly before the public the fact of the absolute need for the last minute protection of the inmates of institutions, of churches, and public halls.

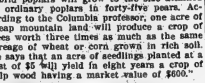
Those in authority in every community should rest until they know for a certainty that every precaution has been taken to safeguard life. That duty is a heavy burden and it is so large that it should not be on one rest until the protection is as near perfect as it is possible to make it.

CROWNING SPORT

Belleville welcomes Stan Burgoyne who is to be the coach for the hockey teams during the coming winter. Mr. Burgoyne's prominence in the sporting world makes his coming here a real event.

The teams have done good work and sport in winter is on a high footing. Still it is realized that the services of a coach may do much to round out the teams.

Anything which will serve to bring out the best in sport here is desired.



Sport was crowned yesterday at the meeting of the Kiwanis Club when the Kiwanis Club entertained all athletes who won prizes at the carnival and the Collegiate hockey team. Sport is today seen in its proper light and all institutions are more or less interested. Sport is taking its part in life training for sport can be made a valuable adjunct of education, for it teaches reliance, discipline, and initiative.

CELLULOSE AGE

"Tall, silvery poplar trees may be grown soon on rocky mountain farms in New York state to make raw material for rayon hosiery and newspapers," says the Baltimore Sun.

"They will not be ordinary poplars, however close the resemblance but perhaps some of the new hybrids developed by Dr. Ralph McKee, professor of chemical engineering at Columbia university. Working with the staff of the New York botanical garden, Dr. McKee has produced more than 100 hybrids from the twenty-one species of poplar. From these he has selected fourteen for their high yield of good pulp wood.

"The significant fact about the trees developed by Dr. McKee in the course of his research on cellulose is that in eight years these hybrid poplars will grow to the size attained by ordinary poplars in forty-five years. According to the Columbia professor, one acre of cheap mountain land will produce a crop of trees worth three times as much as the same acreage of wheat or corn grown in rich soil. He says that an acre of seedlings planted at a cost of $5 will yield in eight years a crop of pulp wood having a market value of $600."

OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaels

They May Never Come True

They may never come true,
All the things I would do
To make your life joyous and sweet;
They may prove but the gleam
Of an over-bright dream,
Instead of a lamp for your feet.

Well I know hopes may wane,
Yet I cannot refrain
From this building of castles in air;
They may never come true,
Yet their towers touch heaven's blue,
Castles built just for you everywhere.

There is seldom an hour
When some wish does not flower,
Some wish that is born for your good;
They may never come true,
But my wishes for you
Would make each hour glad if they could!

SALARY GRAB is now agitating the good citizens of Toronto. Seems the City Fathers had a bill slipped though the Legislature making it legal to vote themselves more salary and they just sat down and made the raise a good one, even making it retroactive to the first of the year. The mayor was not in it on account of having been hit on the head by a plank which made him rather indifferent to salary raises or any other mundane question for the time being. When he recovered his speech and faculties he chided the boys for being so greedy in his absence and this together with the outcry raised by the press has caused the aldermen to pause, wondering if they had purchased their discharge from public life by the attempt to derrick their salaries skyward.

TRANSCONTINENTAL HIKING used to be a profitable playful sport in the early days of automobiling. Now it is not considered good form and is so frowned upon that several states have made it a misdemeanor to solicit rides in automobiles punishable by imprisonment. All kind of freaks appeared as hikers and at first it went over great, now it is a stale number. Latest to follow the open road with a great purpose are two young men who are walking toward the setting sun with the avowed intention of putting the holler in Hollywood where they hope to introduce Canadian folk songs in the sound films. In deference to the prejudice against hitch-hikers these boys say they are not permitted to take rides and must walk all the way. Wonder who has forbidden them to ride.

COMMUNICATION

THROUGH the jungles of darkest Africa the voice of the primitive "telephone"—the drum—still reverberates. By means of a code of drum-beats which no white man has yet been able fully to decipher, one dusky operator speaks to a community miles away. There another drum is pounded, and so, in relay fashion, long distance messages are transmitted from one tribe to another.

Knights of Columbus Officers Profile Spread For Wayfarers

TRENTON, Ont., April 23—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Rich men may have their meals served from plates of gold if they wish, fastidious diners may appreciate the delicacies served up from the kitchens of the best cafes in the world, but Monday night in the Trenton Police Station a squad of twenty homeless wanderers partook of such a meal as none had had for months, and it can be safely stated that they appreciated it much more than the average person would a meal in the best hotel in Canada. Due to the thoughtfulness of the officers in charge of the Knights of Columbus dance held on Monday night in their hall, these homeless men, many of whom had not had a meal at which they had eaten all they wished for weeks, sat down to cup after cup of good hot coffee, and a seemingly endless stream of delicious sandwiches as well as cake such as mother used to make, and then they got rolls of coffee and hundreds of sandwiches left over from the dance disappeared down the throats of the hungry men who were seeing shelter the night from the heavy rainstorm which raged outside. And though it was well past midnight when the refreshments were brought in to them, every man jack was wide awake in an instant at the glad cry of "Eats".

Go far this winter, the Masons, Knights of Columbus, Orangemen, Odd fellows and every church in Trenton, have supplied the wayfarers at the Police Station with eatables at some time or another. Although the men are not able to thank those who think of them in this way, they certainly appreciate anything that is done for them and only those who have been actually hungry can fully appreciate what a square meal means to them.

Youth's Mistake Cost an Overcoat

TRENTON, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter) — Somewhere in this district a young man may have been forced to forego the Easter Sunday dress parade, due to the loss of his new Spring overcoat. If such be the case, he has only himself to blame, in the opinion of the Trenton Police, who now have a young man's spring coat and also his cap in their possession.

Mr. Croydon Young, of Trenton, was at a dance at Carrying Place on April 13th, and was surprised to find on returning to his car after the conclusion of the dance, that someone had left a coat and cap there. He made enquiries in the hall, but no one had reported any loss, and so he brought the articles to the Trenton Police Station where they are at present. Evidently the owner had mistaken his own car, for the Young car and had left the wearing apparel in the wrong car by mistake.

K. OF C. EUCHRE AND DANCE WAS SUCCESS

TRENTON, Ont., April 23.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—At the Knights of Columbus euchre and dance held on Monday night in the K. of C. Hall here, Mrs. James Dillon won the first prize for ladies, while Mr. Robrt Lamoure was first among the gentlemen. Mrs. J. J. McNabb won the first in the ladies' bridge and Mr. Frank Hart was first among the men. Mr. J. J. McNabb won the lone hand prize, and Mr. Hugh O'Rourke won the door prize. Following the cards, dancing was indulged in until early in the morning to the strains of the Collegians Orchestra.

ENGINEERING DEPT. DRAIN TRENTON STREETS

TRENTON, Ont., April 23.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—A gang of men under the direction of the Town Engineering department were busy on the Second Trenton streets yesterday draining water off the roads, which in several instances had collected in large puddles, several inches deep. Drains were being built on the surface through which the surface water will be carried off and it is expected that within a few days the streets will be in perfect order again.

Signs are being erected along the downtown streets warning motorists not to park at certain places, and when these are completed, police will immediately commence checking up on the law violators.

RAILWAY CROSSING SIGNALS EXAMINED

TRENTON, April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Men were engaged all day yesterday in repairing and inspecting the wig wag signals at the Belleville Cemetery crossing two miles west of Belleville. These are inspected periodically, as they have an important duty to perform in the prevention of property damage and loss of life. Three men are assigned to this work for this district, and late yesterday afternoon the wig-wag was again ready to sound out its warning to motorists and others of the danger of approaching trains.

FISHERMEN PAID DEARLY IN COURT

Six Followers of Izaak Walton Caught By Game Warden

TRENTON, Ont., April 22.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Fishing is usually an altogether pleasant experience, especially if the finny denizens of the water are in a hungry mood, but fishing means a far from pleasant experience in Police Court here yesterday for six young men. They were all charged with fishing in the Trent River illegally, that is, by means other than with a fish hook and line. The "undesirables" who were caught by the game warden on Saturday evening last were his ving their fun in pairs two bring from Sidney Township two from Belleville and two from Trenton. Fred and Frank Aikens, both residents of Sidney Township, were appearing a little above the C.P.R. Bridge in Trenton, and apparently had been having good luck, for several fine fish were found in their boat.

Walter Woodacre, of Belleville, along with George Blondin, of Trenton, were spraining a dip net nearby, as were also John Anderson and Henry Williams, both of Trenton. The other boats being used as well as the fish tackle, spears and nets were confiscated by the police and each man was assessed ten dollars and costs by Magistrate O'Rourke when they came before him in Police Court.

Former Trenton Resident Returns

TRENTON, Ont., April 23.—(Special).—Mr. B. P. Connolly of Scranton, Pennsylvania, is visiting friends and relatives, visiting his two sisters in Trenton for the Easter week. Mr. Connolly, a old Trenton boy, left this place about forty years ago and has since been in the dry goods business in Scranton, where he has made a great financial success. Many of his old school friends were delighted to see him again this year.

Mr. H. Kaye, head of the Kaye Clothing Co., manufacturers here returned yesterday from a trip through New York State and ending at New York City, where he visited relatives.

LETTERS to the Editor

210 Dundas Street E.,
Belleville, 21st April 1940

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:—

Sir,—At this distance, it is somewhat difficult to gauge accurately the position of affairs in India at the present time. Then we will again witness the scenes which occurred during the mutiny of 1857 is however, doubtful. Prior to that date, the native regiments included artillery as well as cavalry units but now there is no artillery or cavalry, whether horse or field. The trouble today is entirely political, in that Indians are asking for control of the journey from the great city of Calcutta. To the northwest of that city is the country of Nepal, the home of the Gurkas, and within the province of Bengal there are the fine Sikh troops Lancers, who have over and over again distinguished themselves in battle. Indian Princes and Indians have always remained loyal to Britain as was evidenced by their conduct even as the meeting was, it would have been much more so but for the loyalty of Great Britain had no more stubborn fighters than the Sikhs. At Chillianwalla they almost defeated the British army under Lord Gough. So great were the losses on both sides on that day that the British Government considered the army had been defeated, and decided to send out another, in charge of Lord Gough. Before, however, the order to recall reached India, the British General had retrieved his laurels by completely defeating the enemy at Gujerat. Since that time the Sikhs have given noticeable, but have always been on the contrary, more than ever disposition to cooperate with the Europeans. In order to overcome the Gurkas many stiff battles were fought and Great Britain has done much to eradicate famine, and pestilence, two scourges which carried off vast numbers of natives in the past. An attempt is now being made to abolish child marriages, as well as to curtail the activities of fakirs, who mutilate themselves and undergo torture of the most awful description. Along the Banks of the Ganges and other rivers there are many great temples, the like of which is not to be found either on this continent or in Europe. Notably is this the case at the Holy City Benares whether congregate vast multitudes at certain seasons of the year.

India has been termed, not without cause, "The brightest gem in the British crown. She has an immense trade with the Motherland, which consists of great quantities of machinery among other items; on the other hand Great Britain is her best customer, purchasing, as she does, great quantities of tea, rice, spices and raw wheat. Of late years too, she has greatly increased her purchases of cotton. In this latter instance it will be noted that Great Britain is practically independent of American cotton, more particularly since the great irrigation works on the Nile in Egypt have ensured a steady supply from that country and, together therefore, trade with India is of therefore, the utmost with India is of great importance, from a point of view of news coming from there is of vital significance.

Yours faithfully,
Jno. A. Hyslop.

Grape Island

Less than a hundred years ago there was an Indian Village on a small narrow island about two miles from Massassaga Point in Mosquito Bay.

In a little booklet, printed fifty years ago at Hamilton, Rev. Richardson Stewart describes his coming from the United States, in 1831, to Canada, and in particular to Hallowell in Prince Edward County. Included in a vivid story of the trials and difficulties of the Methodist itinerant is Upper at that interesting and exciting period, is a description of Indian Island, of a visit to the Indian Village on Grape Island.

Here it is.

"It is bounded by a fiord, a replica of Grape Island, on the Bay of Quinte, near Belleville. There were two rows of houses in the centre of the island, with a street between the rows. The preaching house had a triangular steel bell, to call the people to worship. The red faces assembled, it being Sunday, and I preached to them. Their interpreter would take more time in telling them what I said than it took me to say it. The spirit of the Holy One was in the midst. such swell singing I never heard before from human voices, according to number, after preaching I walked through the village, and was very much the squaws were frying muskrats for dinner."

The Rev. William Case, 'the father of Canadian missions" first visited the Bay of Quinte in 1825. It was his purpose to establish an Indian village, at some convenient place, where the Indians could be instructed in useful pursuits and at the same time be under the paternal eye of the mission aries. For these children of the forest were possessed with a roving disposition. Little did apt to wander of which notice. Indeed these particular Mississauga Indians or Bay of Quinte Indians as they are commonly known, were in the habit of leaving by canoe about every month in search of Rice River to Stone Lake and other parts to the north, to hunt afid fish, until the approach of winter made it necessary for their return to the Bay. Old Chief Yellow Head had two favorite villages on the Bay of Quinte, where the Indians "remained most of the year, namely: "Kente," at the mouth of these in time were easily converted Grape Quinte, the name given to the Bay.

The plan of the Indian village there was one street. To this four houses were leased two Islands in Mosquito Bay, on the Bay of Quinte. These Islands thus leased were Huff's Island, then known as "Logoma," consisting of about 100 acres, and Grape Island with eleven acres.

At this time the Bay of Quinte must have been a happy hunting ground for the Indians who frequented its transient waters, wild fowl were in thousands. Pigeons appeared in "Clouds" and "flew so low at times they could easily be killed with poles." The land was chiefly timbered and there were no clearings.

Even before the village was ready in 1827, the Indians were camped on the island patiently awaiting the completion of the houses. It was a success from the start. Indians were given to agriculture, carpentry, sewing and other useful arts. There were so many of them that it was difficult to excite the wonder and curiosity, such as tools, implements, furniture, clothing and cooking utensils, that it was natural then, the news of these having gone out, for the Indians to come in increasing numbers. The village was becoming over crowded. The island was too small. We must, however, from Mr. Stewart's narrative that the village was on Grape Island and that Grape Island was given to great while from that time until the station was moved to a new place on Georgian Bay.

Canniff, in his, history of Upper Canada, mentions Grape Island on several parts We are indebted to his work for some of the data used in this article.

There are few signs of the old village on Grape Island today. Time and weather have obliterated all signs. But twenty five years ago, more or less, boys who were playing on the neighborhood, caught from the air, perhaps, treasured arrow from, there were rumors of old Indian battlegrounds, graves and buried treasure. Finds were occasionally made by farmers ploughing up arrowheads, tomahawks and such. To add, at night there were, strange cries, queer sounds and ghostly lights from the marshes and lagoons. It was of no matter that there might be explained as the calls of the loons and other resident wild fowl; the splash of jumping fish; the phosphoric glow of marsh decadence. It was enough for imaginative young adventurers. Expeditions set out to several mounds and other likely places where digging brought up a few trifles bones and broken pottery. Grape Island was combed over, at that time the old excavations of the village were plainly discernible.

For that part of the Bay in which Grape Island lies there is a great attraction, on moonlight nights it is most agreeable to look over the changing waters to the high shore to the south, or the farther reaches to the West, to be refreshed by the cooling breezes rising from the bay, and to be intrigued by its manifold voices. You may conjure up then, if you please a pageant in which there are Indians, thousands and thousands of Indians.

Such is the mystic attraction and whatever may be the truth of it is it said that once having spent a night on Grape Island a summer may not pass without returning again to the historic spot.

CANADA CEMENT HONOURED THE CITY CHAMPIONS

Gold Watches And Trophies Were Presented to City League Winners

Canada Cement Company paid signal honours last night to the members of their hockey team who this year captured the Lefbourne and Burrows cups emblematic of the city league championship for the second time successively. The affair was staged at the home of Mr. Fred MacDonald at Point Anne, and no stone was left unturned to provide the utmost entertainment for the guests.

The members of the hockey team were the recipients of beautiful gold watches, suitably engraved, while photos of the team taken two weeks ago accompanied the watches. It was certainly well-merited on the part of the players while the Company officials are to be congratulated on the forethought.

Mr. F. H. Legate, the genial general manager of the Point Anne branch of the Canada Cement acted as chairman and in his own inimitable style he kept things moving along in splendid fashion. Mr. Tom Mason, popular local pianist delighted the guests with a number of vocal selections while "Sandy" Burrows led the community singing.

Mr. Legate in his few remarks paid tribute to the hockey team for the sportsmanship shown throughout winter and offered his congratulations to the Board of strategy, Rods, Reeder and Arthur Long. He first called upon Matthew Morrison, Principal of Point Anne School, who related the usual kinds of success next season. Mr. Morrison was instrumental in the development of Hart McDonald and Rod Stull, two of the forwards on Point Anne's team.

Mr. E. D. Finkle, manager of the Finkle Electric team said it was his first year in City League hockey and although his team did not finish on top they gave the Canada Cement team the biggest scare of the season.

Albert Armstrong, who represented the Y's Men's Club in the absence of Donald Roe, who is also Secretary of the League, spoke of the splendid feeling of sportsmanship which had existed throughout the season between the team managers and league officials. He tendered his thanks to Mr. Fred McDonald, the host, and also to the Canada Cement Hockey Club.

Sam Curry, League President, thanked the managers and league executive for the cooperation given during the season. In the absence of Mr. W. C. Leybourne, he presented the Leybourne trophies to Arthur Long, manager of the Canada Cement Club.

Mr. S. R. Burrows, donor of the beautiful new trophy, extended his best wishes to the Club and said, that should they capture it next year, they could retain it. Mr. Burrows, representing the Arena Directors said officials were glad to cooperate with the City League and professed an even more successful season next year.

Mr. F. H. Legate then presented the players with the engraved watches and photos and Arthur Long responded for the recipients, thanked the Company for the gifts, Mr. Long remarked on the success he had received as manager, and said he looked forward to another successful year in 1931.

Mrs. Arthur Long, Mrs. Thomas Bowler, Mrs. Armstrong, and Mrs. Fred MacDonald assisted by a number of Point Anne's maidens were the recipients of hearty cheers on the manner in which the whole affair was carried out. The home was beautifully decorated with blue and white streamers while miniature hockey sticks graced the tables and walls.

The party was concluded with a number of selections by Tom Mason.

GIBSON'S WORK HIGHLY PRAISED

Veteran Hurler at His Best as Brufins Lose By 5 to 0

Newark, April 23—As the Toronto Leafs were going through their preliminary calisthenics yesterday in preparation for the third game of their series with the Bears, Manager Steve O'Neill was asked for an opinion on his staff. "Well," he said, "we've got better pitching and better catching than we had last year, and if the boys hit in the manner I think they are capable of, we will get some place."

O'Neill apparently knew whereof he spoke as yesterday the Leafs did some hitting, behind the fine pitching of Sam Gibson and the Bears were treated to a bath of kakaoulac to the thickness of 5 to 0.

The an early season performance Gibson's work was a gem. He held the slugging Grizzlies to eight scattered hits in only one inning, the ninth, when he in danger of biting himself. In that frame the Bruins filled the bases with one out on two singles and a hit batsman, but "Red" Munch usually a tough man in the pinch slashed one back at Gibson and he promptly turned in into a double play.

The Leafs were pitted against one Al Van Deavaigne, better known to the baseball populace around the International League circuit as Al Harris. He is still Harris as far as baseball is concerned, it was revealed that he is of Spanish extraction and his correct name is Deavaigne.

HACKETT WINNER ON FOUL IN FIFTH

Toronto, April 23—After viewing one of the most impressive showings of his professional career, Sammy Hackett, stellar local featherweight, was declared the winner over "Mickey" Billy Shaw of Detroit, Michigan State champion, at the Arena Gardens last night. The bout terminated when Shaw drove home a low punch after the bell rung at the end of the fifth round. Hackett fell along the ropes and sank to the floor and Referee Lou E. Marks had no hesitancy in declaring him the winner.

There was no doubt as to the lowness or force of that final blow. It was not the only one of its kind. Low punches had hurt Hackett in the previous round, and, although the Toronto boy claimed no foul, he might well have been awarded the victory in the fourth instead. He had been guilty of hitting on the breaks.

The ladies worked at the outfit for our little Indian girl, Jessie Flett who is at Mackay School, the Pas, Manitoba.

The meeting was closed with the regular order of service.

Mr. Moore has been here on two previous occasions and his lectures are always interesting. The lecture is sponsored by the Horticultural Society and everyone interested is invited.

At the regular meeting of the Literary Society in the basement of the United Church on Monday evening, Members Lacie Kindred and Frost gave a splendid musical entertainment. Dr. Locke gave a violin solo, and Fred Hunter of Belleville was the guest on the evening.

At a business meeting of the Tweed Board of Trade Mr. W. S. Gordon, Steel Works, Ltd., at the request of Mr. James Reid gave the following particulars of the industry he had just taken over.

The plant is located in Hamilton and carried on business under the name of Machine and Equipment, Ltd., manufacturers of contractors' supplies, such as concrete mixers, power hoists, steam shovels, etc.

In reply to Mr. Ryan's query as to the possibilities for any of the business coming to Tweed, Mr. Gordon stated that it depended entirely on what type the Dominion Foundries could handle for it would mean close figuring to pay freight and meet the price of castings previously obtained in Hamilton, but if this could be done, there would no doubt be a large increase in the number of men at present employed at the foundry. There was also a possibility of certain of the products being manufactured there also. This would mean a great increase in the extension of the Dominion Foundries, as it would take some time to figure out the costs and adaptability of the two plants as to which could produce more efficiently. It would take time he would certainly like to see as much of the business as possible come to Tweed.

Miss Beale Gordon of Toronto is holidaying with her parents Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Gordon.

Mrs. Beach is spending Easter with her husband at St. Anne De Bellevue.

Mr. T. E. Moffat, Assistant Manager was in Belleville on Thursday.

Yellville, Ark., will be governed by feminine hands during coming year.

NEW COACH AND PRIZE WINNERS AT KIWANIS CLUB

Value of Amateur Sport is Stressed By Mr. Stan Burgoyne

SPORTS DAY AT CLUB

"Play up! play play the game" is an axiom that sport and was exemplified in many different ways at the Sports Day luncheon held by the Kiwanis Club yesterday at the Queens Hotel. The Club were hosts to those who won trophies at the Joe Karnival last winter as well as the Belleville Collegiate hockey team which made such an impressive showing in the Ontario Interscholastic series. Other guests were representatives of the various teams from which the contestants came including Professor Campbell from the Ontario School for the Deaf, Miss Anna Hurley, St. Michael's Academy, Kiwanian Gordon Cornell principal of Queen Mary school, Edgar Bateman, vice principal of Queen Victoria and L. A. Moore principal of Ontario Business College The speaker of the day was Stan Burgoyne, who this week has been engaged as coach of the hockey team in Belleville during the coming winter His game is interesting talk on the value in this city as a boy and the ethics of sport as applied to the building of manhood.

Guests Introduced

Joe Imlah presided at the luncheon and the meeting was turned over to Paul Pre-ton C. MacLaurin had the presentations . Reg Wessman was song leader and Charles Hanna acted as sergeant-at-arms and collected many fines for breaches of the rules The speaker of the day was introduced by Kiwanian George Lee and was responsible for the address was delightfully expressed by John D. O'Flynn an old chum. Kiwanian MacLaurin in introducing the members of the Collegiate Hockey team thanked them for their showing and expressed the pleasure of the club in having them as guests. The team was introduced Hilton McClintock, Tom Byrnes, Ted Hughes, Earl McDonald Jack Graves, Rene St. Denis, Fred Harold Mott, Ralph Champaign, Clifford Barriage, and J. Lester Shiels, the coach and manager. Mr. Shiels, McKinnon and Barriage with Jack Hooker were unable to be present. The thanks of the team was expressed by Earl McDonald.

The Barristers' Cup won by Rube Schensel of Trenton in the district skating championship, was presented by R. C. Donnan to Miss K. Dadwell for Mr. Schensel and also the Kiwanis Club cup by Mr. Donnan. This cup was the open championship. Another open speed cup was presented by President Jim Imlah to Jack Murphy for boys ,secondary school. The Dominion Bakeries trophy was presented by George Griffith in the absence of Ernie Shier manager of the bakeries to Jack Murphy. This young speed merchant is a pupil of the Vocational School and the trophies will be added to the case now just held by the Belleville Collegiate students. The Belle Theatre trophy presented by Manager Nealon was presented by him to Miss K. Dadwell of Trenton for winning the girl's secondary school race. Mr. Moore principal of the school was asked to stand with Miss Dadwell while the presentation was being made.

AWARDS

Robert Thompson, a student at the C. S. D. was presented with a cup for winning the senior boy's race by Fred Pre-ton in a few brief words. The principle Campbell transmitted to Thompson by sign the presentation speech in full and the young student thanked Mr. Burgoyne at the conclusion. Miss Margaret Lee a student at St. Mary's Academy was given the girls' junior cup by Mr. J. O. Herity and Miss Florence Tuffs a collegiate student was given the senior trophy for public schools by Mr. Ernie Dickens. The cup for the senior boys won by Garnet Adams and presented by A. J. Collins. After the presentations Mr. R. C. Donnan explained the plan of the opening of the Belleville Amateur Athletic Association to be held in the Chamber of Commerce building on Thursday night and hoped that every Kiwanian would be present to foster the promotion of sport of all kinds in this city.

Stan Burgoyne in opening his remarks recalled vividly the olden days in this city and remembered by many assembled around the banquet board. The wheat Hill gang, the Sandbar Flats, the Wharf Rats and other combinations of companions were recalled and a hearty laugh was enjoyed as he told of the games which were played. Those days have passed on from Belleville to put the city on the map and no matter where one roams a Belleville citizen resident will be there. The speaker told of games played with the old Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, in hockey and football. Mr. Burgoyne told of the benefit of sport in building character and he could teach the boy to depend on himself and to play fair and if the principal is firmly embedded in the participant of sport will make a far better citizen. The speaker exhibited the difference between professional and amateur angle of sport, stating that in professional company a man was paid to take orders from one higher in authority, while in the amateur game the player was taught to use his initiative. The amateur code develops the mind, which is the aim of life.

Editor, Intelligencer:

Better, better we are forced to admit but there is still oodles of room for improvement, we think. The reception lately has been perfectly terrible and I doubte very much if we'd recognize good reception if we heard it now and then.

Heard the Troika Bells program last night and believe me it was some treat. Haven't heard that broadcast since they went off the Sunday afternoon presentations. In my humble opinion the balalaika orchestra is one of the prettiest things a person could ever hope to listen to.

Everybody going to the great spelling match of the ages, tonight? If Andy doesn't learn how to spell such words as "choose", I'm very much afraid they will, this show the Whale of the Loop has what they thought they would.

A thrilling episode takes place during the East of Cairo program tonight when stories surrounding an old Spanish fortress near Manilla cause four young Americans and their guide to take to cover from their sightseeing tour of the Philippines to investigate the origin of these stories. The episode is titled, "The Haunted Fortress" so let's go for a real thrill. WEAF at 8.

The Sylvania Foresters over WJZ tonight at 8.30 present their quartet in the numeric, "Regimental Song" from Rudolf Friml's musical romance of "a few seasons ago", "The White Eagle".

Alan Jones, tenor, is singing Romany Memories" during the "Radio" broadcast tonight in a half-hour of Orienta sketches during the breakfast of the Monbol concert. WEAF at 8.30

B. A. Rolfe and his Lackies play for us tonight at 8 p.m. over WJZ. Don't forget any second invitation to join in the fun, do you?

here that the nurse comes in contact with the child of two to six years, known as the pre-school age. That urly of lhp child's life perhaps receives the least attention, but the help they with the new baby has no time to supervise the growth of the two year old, the four year old, and these children get along, either growing normally or developing various defects of mouth, nose, eyes, faulty nutrition, etc. In many cases these defects go unnoticed until the child enters school. There is much room for the growth of Child Welfare work in this district. At the Child Welfare conference held each week, 1465 infants and pre-school age children were weighed. It if very encouraging to the nurse to have the mothers continue their visits even in zero weather, often in storm and rain.

"There were 20 visits made to Carnifton School, 25 defects being corrected. While there is much to be desired in the corrective work it is of great encouragement to find the importance the children attached to their own bodily fitness. 91 visits were made to school children. More home visiting would add to the effectiveness of the work, but because of the amount of work in Belleville, it is impossible to do more at the present time.

"There were 198 prenatal visits to 70 expectant mothers, and 95 post-treatment cases were given 793 visits.

"The car has been of untold value in energy and time saved.

"I would also try to convey to you the thanks of the 443 people who were benefitted by the service during 1929, new-born babies; mothers, young and middle-aged; male, women, and children who have been acutely ill and are now well; the aged who are assisted in the visit of the nurse; and relatives of those who have taken the time to express their thanks."
